POETRY.

HUMAN LIFE.

WHEN Phœbus ſommons in the day,
And ſpreads around the light;
The ſtars in pallid flames depart,
Companions of the night.

When Zephyr blows the paleid gale,
To vernal flowers kind,
The bluſhing roſe his friendſhip owns,
And opens to the wind.

But if the furious ſouth wind roar,
He horror deals around;
The flowers torn up by the root,
Lie ſcatter'd on the ground.

Of the ſmooth ſea in gentle tides
Seems waftonly to play;
The painted ſhips ſecurely ride,
And make the proſpect gay.

Of by a ſudden form of wind,
The main's in fury loſt;
The proſpect changes, no ſhips you ſee,
For men and ſhips are loſt.

By theſe examples, men, be wam'd,
Not truſt to fortune's guiles;
By nature all is prone to change,
And frowns ſucceed her ſmiles.

CHARACTERISTIC TRAIT.

Mr. Buſſel,

TRAITS of conſpicuous men, ſerve as a chart by which nature may be diſcovered in her operations on our ſpecies:—You may then conſider diſſertation on this point, by inſerting the following anecdote, tranſlated from a late French paper, of the conqueror Bonaparte.

"Few people, ſays a Paris paper, now remember, that on the ſecond of March, 1784 the famous Aeronaut Blanchard drew an immenſe concourſe of people to the Champ de Mars, to ſee him aſcend in a balloon. Every thing was prepared at 12 o'clock, Blanchard was about to get into the boat, when a young ſcholar of the military ſchool ruſhed forward with his ſword in his hand, with an intention of affronting with him: Blanchard would not conſent, but neither his entreaties, nor the exclamations of the crowd, which curioſity was delayed by this circumſtance, could induce the young man to give up his deſign. A perſon went to inform the Governor of the military ſchool, who immediately ordered him to deſcend from the balloon, which he refuſed, & even attempted to cut the cord with his ſword, but was prevented. The Marquis de Valerie ſtood him and dragged him out of the balloon. In ſpite of the delay which his obſtinacy cauſed to the public, his courage and enterprize excited admiration.

"This event cauſed much converſation at Paris; it was longer, becauſe every thing is forgotten in time. Do you know who this young adventurer was,—he ſhewed ſo much courage? It was Bonaparte!!!"

HARTFORD, November 14.

Extract of a letter from Newbern (N. C.) dated October 25.

"Upwards of one hundred perſons have died with the yellow fever at Wilmington, in the courſe of two or three weeks: a greater proportion, aſtonriſhing the number of people, than when it raged with ſuch violence in Philadelphia—fortunately we are conſtantly healthy here."

The French miniſter at Philadelphia has publiſhed a proclamation to the French citizens in the U. States in which he addreſſes their patriotiſm, and concludes with aſſuring them, that the offer of the French chancellor of the national treaſure will not be granted to any Frenchmen but thoſe who have ſworn conſtantly bearing the national cockade. The Executive Directory have preſentered thus.

A pitiful Frigate was lately blown up at Port-au-Paiſ, and of 250 men then on board, 7 only were ſaved.

FROM THE LONDON RECORDER.

ANECDOTES.

Sir THOMAS WRIOTHESLEY, the firſt Earl of Southampton.

WHEN he was Lord Chancellor he uſed to ſay, "That force AWED, but juſtice GOVERNED the world." Over-hearing one of his ſervants putting off a petitioner becauſe his maſter was not at leiſure, he briſkly reprimanded him with this reply. "You might as well have ſaid that I have not leiſure to be Lord Chancellor"—Two things he determined his ſervants ſhould not gain by—his livings and his decrees. The firſt he laid belonged to God—the ſecond, to the King; whom every man, in his opinion, ſold who made a ſale of juſtice. "To honeſt men," ſayſhe, "their places are enough—to knaves too much."

Dr. DONNE.

When King JAMES the Firſt preſented Dr. DONNE with the Deanry of St. Paul's, he ſent for him one day as he was about to ſit down to dinner and addreſſed him in the following manner—"Dr. DONNE, I have invited you to dinner, and though you ſit not down with me, yet I will carve to you a diſh that I know you love well for knowing you love London, I do therefore make you Dean of St. Paul's; and when I have dined then do you take your beloved diſh home to your family, ſay grace there to yourſelf; and much good may it do you."

AN INTERESTING FABLE,

WITH A MORAL ATTACHED.

AN aged, peaceable Traveller, journeying on the road in purſuit of a lawful employment, was ſuddenly attacked by a band of highwaymen armed from head to foot, who demanded his money.—Not being able to reſiſt them, our innocent traveller was compelled to ſubmit to the robbery, though he protended loudly againſt the injuſtice of it; and requeſted they would leave him ſufficient to defray his expences, to the place of his deſtination. They complied with the request. Soon after he met a company of "good friends," to whom he related his miſfortunes, but who inſtead of conſoling him, demanded the little pittance the robbers left him urging as a reaſon, that as he had "ſuffered" the highwaymen to take the chief part of his money, he could have no cauſe for complaint of his "good friends" took the remainder.

A MORAL.

For this Fable may be found in the late letter of Mr. ADET to the Secretary of State.

CURIOUS EXPERIMENT.

The following experiment on fatting hogs has been made. It merits attention. One hog, out of eight weat put in a cage made of planks, one ſide of which was made to move with pegs, exactly to fit the ſide of the hog ſo that he could only have up to feed, and lie down on his belly, with ſmall holes at the bottom for the excreta to drain off, and a door behind to remove the dung. The cage ſtood upon four feet, a foot from the ground. He weighed alive when put in the cage, 1138 lb. was kept five weeks and four days, and when weighed alive 1858. 3lb. having eaten two bushels of barley meal, and other eight bushels of boiled potatoes. The other ſeven hogs, the larger when put up, weighed from one to two ſtone leſs when killed.
