FROM THE NATIONAL GAZETTE. THOUGHTS ON THE PRESENT INDIAN WAR.

By H. H. BRACKENRIDGE, of Pittsburgh. BEING occasionally in this city, I feel myself impelled to give my sentiments on this subject, and I gave my name in order to obtain confidence, because it is to be presumed that a man will not lightly avow what he has not weighed, and in which he has not confidence himself.

I am struck being in the Gazette, extracts of letters that were never written, and paragraphs prepared from ignorance or mistake of facts.—Having resided some years in the western country, and being interested, I have thought much on the subject, and though I may not know more than the most ignorant man there, yet I am persuaded that I know more than the wisest man that has never been there.

The writers of extracts, and the paragraphs, in the first place, endeavour to affect the public mind by holding up the original right of these aborigines to the soil.—It is a right which I have never thought with much respect. It is like the claim of the children; it is mine, for I first saw, or what that of the Buffalo might be, it is mine for I first saw it.—I consider the earth as given to man to cultivate, and each should use his share, in as near to exclude others, and should be restricted to that mode of using it, which is most favorable to the support of the greatest numbers; and consequently productive of the greatest sum of happiness, that is, the cultivation of the soil. I pay little regard, therefore, to any right which is not founded in agricultural occupancy.

But supposing these natives to have had an absolute & exclusive right, it is not destroyed by a subsequent right on our part in consequence of our treaty with Great Britain. During the war with that power, we sent their natives the subsidies of the King of England; we fed their men, in his hand, as the manahaw and scalping knife were in theirs, we sent the warriors in question to the superior power, we shall we treat with the principal, and make concessions in lieu of this concession—and shall we again treat with the subordinate, and purchase a treaty and concede to them also? Be it so, there is nothing to be said, for it has been done.—What has appeared in the paper of the other day, from the Secretary at War, is superfluous in being and illustrating this.

But as to treaties with these Indians, under present circumstances, I have no confidence in them.—Why—Do not savages observe treaties? No.—Longer than the principles of rapacity, being indolent, and more disposed to acquire by force, than by equity. But under present circumstances, all treaties with them shall be negotiatory. While Canada was in possession of the French, were not these Indians hostile to us, and regardless of all treaties, because it was not the interest of that nation that they should be at peace with us, when it was in their power, to injure them to a war. Are we not at this time in the same situation with respect to the Indians, and the British in possession of Canada? Hence it is that it was expedient, and has been found practicable, to establish treaties with the Creeks, or other nations remote from the British province. But with these Indians, treaties cannot be established, or if established, would not be observed.

Whether the British government has an eye to the territory ceded, I shall not say—I rather think not; but certainly it has an eye to the Indian trade, and on this account supports the savage. I shall not say that this is done directly by the governor of Canada, the commandant at Detroit, but certainly through the medium of the Indian agents, and with the knowledge and approbation of the ministry at home. Why else are the Indians the Lakes not surrendered, when all pretence of the treaty not being fulfilled on our part is taken away? How have the Indians, north of the Lakes been excited, and brought to the Miami village to engage in the war?—Certainly, not by the establishment of the Indian agents, but by the voice of the British agents who had first at Detroit to supply them.—Two tribes called the savos with ammunition, clothing and provisions.—How have they kept a body of Indians as our army in the late engagement, been supported but by provisions from the king's stores?—They have been supplied from a king's store at what are called the Rapids, about 60 miles from the Miami towns. Would Canadian volunteers or militia, march to aid these Indians, and not the government solicit or employ it? That volunteers did run out, as our practice is, I know, though not to what amount they may have been in battle.

It is not a war, therefore, with Indians, merely; it is a war with the British King, and cover.—Have we felt the jaw of the lion, and shall we be still lashed with his tail?

With respect to the mode of war, still to be pursued: What, President, that which was adopted and pursued the last campaign, but the means different.—More men and higher pay;—because this will procure better troops. A greater number of light infantry, or rifle corps, would be advisable. But the system already adopted, in part executed, I approve. The establishment of forts in the country, and planting ourselves in the face of the British province, and conveying these Indians that a greater than the British, whom they ventrude, are now there.

It is suggested by paragraphs, that an incentive was of small parties with a premium for scalp, fighting the Indians in their own way, would be best. It might indeed harass them but from the circumstances stated, could produce no substantial and lasting effect. It is also contended that an incentive was of larger bodies, in the manner of the Kentucky warriors, has year would avail. I say not.—I never considered the Kentucky expedition under Wilkinson or Scott; as more than a thousand honorable to those who went, but little serviceable to those at home. Indians are seldom surprised, or if in part, the whole object is the killing a warrior or two, and the carrying of women and children, an incumbrance more than a spoil.

There are those who advocate what is called defensive war, by posts on the frontiers, and ranging companies. I say, the best defence is offence. Instead of warding off blows, give one. If you could surround the frontier with a rank and file of men, like the wall of China, and take care that they should never sleep, you might expect something.—But, posts and ranging companies are but a help and no effectual defence. It is but watching beasts of prey, who come against our folds, instead of penetrating the forests where they haunt, and extending the race.

With respect to the mode of war, I am confident the establishing ourselves in the face of Canada will alone be effectual; but with respect to the route, would suggest, whether by the way of Lake Erie would not have been a preferable; that is, by establishing a garrison at Presque Isle and building armed vessels on the Lakes, to transport troops and convey provisions; again, a post on the west of the lake, and from thence, the progress to the Miami towns.—At least, whether an inland route that our troops ought not to be embarked. I have not the smallest doubt; but that unless effective arrangements are made for the ensuing summer, and laid in the face of the Six Nations, and so as to specify strike them, they will avow themselves; for, I aver that except a few chiefs, they are in disposition hostile, and nothing but the principle of fear restrains them at this moment.

A garrison at Presque Isle would secure their neutrality, or perhaps engage them to act in our favor. It is shown early by the paragraphs, few of whom I have to be shown of this city, that the possession and security of the western territory, ought not to be withheld from these States—we have it, we have it, we have it, it is— I inquire only, what are the best means of practicing the settlements on the side of the river?—I say only, means is by reaching the source of hostility, and taking the commanding ground of posts to the westward.

But is not the government bound to give reasonable satisfaction of the western soil to those to whom they have sold, and to their officers and soldiers to whom they have made grants? Shall every thing be done to support credit in making a liberal provision for the public debt;—even though this has brought a great evil, because it is like a calculation from the earth, by which the means of our present, and they get more by our troops from them in peace, than the captures they would make in war;—and the province of Canada and the fur-trade of the west, is a fluke which they have to lose.

If the world has been abandoned at our rising, if they have seen the meridian beams of our splendor in establishing public credit, let them not regret our means, and want of spirit in suffering the out-wards of our country, the frontier settlements, to be cut to pieces by the axe of the savage, when the probability is, I think, certainly, that it is to put into their hands by our late inveterate, but, disaffected enemy,

I beg the public to excuse these things, written hastily—and let them have their weight with every humane and good man, which the reason of them may support. I say humane, because humanity is not on the side of the savages, but on our side. They have been the aggressors. They are not to be appeased. They refuse all treaty, on respect none.—They cannot, for it is not the will of those by whom they are imposed.

It is said, the British government cannot possibly countenance these people, for the commandant and officers at Detroit are humane to our prisoners, and actually purchase them at a great price from the savages. No doubt—it is but a little matter to redeem a captive but a great matter to have our armies defeated, and excluded from the country.

In looking over what I have written, there is no sentiment that I would retract, but add one more, viz. Why dread the expense of an effective and lasting arrangement for the purposes suggested? The moment we take command of the savages, instead of leaving them to Britain, the fur-trade of the immense world of the west will amply repay us, creating a trade in the free coat parts, of which at present they have no idea.—I say, take command of the Indians, the only way, in which, is to place ourselves upon an equal ground with our rivals, and impress the savages with an opinion that we are at least an equal power. All treaty with them until they are humbled and reduced is absurd; and even then to be considered as of duration no longer than while the external pressure of apprehended force keeps them down.

After some time the interests of trade may complain and bid them, and we may have it in our power to make a proper use of the people.

Proceedings of Congress.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES of the UNITED STATES. MONDAY, February 13.

MR. S. BOWEN, from the committee on enrolled bills, reported, that the committee did on the 11th instant, wait on the President of the United States and present for his approbation the bill to establish the Post-Office and Post-Roads within the United States.

The House resolved itself into a committee of the whole on the re-presentation bill.—(Mr. W. Smith in chair.)

The ratio of representation was fixed at thirty thousand by the committee.—Yeas 20—Nays 21.

TUESDAY, February 14.

The House resolved itself into a committee of the whole, (Mr. Minniberg in the chair) on the bill relative to the election of a President and Vice President of the United States, and declaring the officer who shall act as President in case of Vacancies in the office both of President and Vice President.

A message was delivered by Mr. Secretary Otis, informing the house, that the Senate had passed a bill for regulating process in the courts of the United States, and providing compensation for the officers of the said Courts and jurors, and witnesses.

WEDNESDAY, February 15.

The House resolved itself into a committee of the whole, (Mr. W. Smith in the chair) on the re-presentation bill.

The question being taken on a motion to substitute the first day of October, 1792, for the 20th of March, 1792, as the period for an annual re-resentation, it passed in the negative.

A motion was then made by Mr. Vinson, to appoint the Representatives as follows: New-Hampshire, 5 members; Massachusetts, 16; Vermont, 3; Rhode-Island, 2; Connecticut, 8; New-York, 11; New-Jersey, 6; Pennsylvania, 14; Delaware, 2; Maryland, 9; Virginia, 21; Kentucky, 2; North-Carolina, 12; Georgia, 2.

After a short time spent in discussing the proposition, the committee rose and reported progress.

THURSDAY, February 16.

The House resolved itself into a committee of the whole, on the bill for appointment of Representatives among the several States, &c. (Mr. W. Smith in the chair.)

It was moved to fill up the blank after the State of New-Hampshire, with 5 free.

After considerable debate on the motion it was withdrawn, for the purpose of bringing in a proposed amendment to the first section, which was read, and after some debate, it was lost; after which the committee rose.
