FOR THE HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE. To Meffer. Auditer, Advifer, Andita Querela & Co.

T HAVE been waiting in expeditation that fome ables PAYE been waiting in expectation in the arms of pen would remark on your licularations.—But as no one has thought proper to come forward in favour of the criminated Gentlemen, I would be gleave to submit the criminated Gentlement, would be marte to intuine a few oblevations to your e mideration.

As I with not to be abufed in felt; so I will endea-your not to provoke a pen that is too ape to be diped in

It shall be granted that you are not feeking for places, and that your motives for writing are honourable Yet let me alk, whether you have not been rather pre cipitate in your charges, and cruel in your mode of handling them? Character is facred—A good name is handling them? Charafter is facred—A good name is of more value than all other things—This you will acknowledge—but hold, that Gentlemen ought nor to continue in places of public importance, anders they are qualified to fill them—And If they will, through ignorance and fully, expote themselves to public derifoce, they richly deserve a Newspare lashing—Thefe I prefame, are your fendiments. But fer me als you as mea—as gentleme—as christians, whether you ought not to have taken private mediures in order to convince these Gentlemen of their inadiumsensers to the hold.

not to have taken private measures in order to convince those Gentlemen of their justiquateners to the business assigned them; see you attempted to bring the public odium upon them in the manner you have done? If you had previously admonsted them of their failing—and they had proved "incorrigible"—would neither retorm, nor resgn, then your pointed fevernly would have been more excusable.

Besides are not your chirpes too indiscriminately made? And have you not, in one instance at least, included, too far, a vein of Sairre? Has not the Gentleman of the "white wand" been two unmerisfully administed when they commercially dealt with? Pause a moment? And be not offended at the questions. Consider that no man is perfect—and name if your car, the man who possessed interesting took good qualities than that officer—who has more been of the second provides and the second provides and the second provides that the officer—who has more been of the control of the second provides and the second provides that the officer—who has more been of the control of the second provides and the benevolence of heart—who does more for the fick and diffrested—more for the widow and fatherless, and for those who have none to help them! Will you not own that he possesses these virtues, I had almost faid, these that he policifes these virtees, I had almost faid, these Grad-like articulate, in an eminent degree? I say, yea, without waiting for an answer—Why then have you, for ow failing, to wantonly endeavoured to damn his character forever?

The Gendemen of the Bench, it is true were not bred to the law. And their attainments in legal knowledge, these they have "filled the awful fear of Juffice," have not added creatly to their original Stock. edge, space they have "I tilled the awful leat or Juttee, havening addled greatly to their original Stock. But admit that they are descreat its understanding, and do not make to respectable a fight as could be withed admit also, that the county would be happy in their re-tirement; yet is it right and fit that they should be thus admit and, that they floud be thus they floudd be thus tirement; yet is it right and fir that they floudd be thus violently and publickly arrained in the first inflance?

Think coully, Gratlemen, and wish hold "the barbed atrows of indignant Satire," and let the "milk" of kindness flow from your future pera.

IMPARTIALIS.

FOR THE HAMPSHIRE GAZETIE MR. BUTLER.

WHEN a writer under any particular fignature.

Virequently offers his feutiments to the public, it is natural to enquire, who, and what, he is. I have heard many fuch enquiries respecting the Auditor, and what his motive could be in thus freely telling what he lears respecting some of our Great Folks. I have no objection to being known; neither have Iscereted mybeats respecting some of our Greet Folks. I have no objection to being known neither have Heernete appeared in objection to being known in a titler have Heernete appeared in opened is prisent from how indiseased the measure. My rank in life is not such as to give any particular efficacy to my fentiments; not being raisfed from a flar of mediocrity. I move in the middle walks of life, from which no office in the county could tempt me to depart. I have heard that the Anditor was lashing the Great Folks, that he might risk to confideration on their train. I reproduct the idea, and deny the fast; and find low & failed was have operated on my mind. I absorbed the man who from personal pique, and private interest, findl attack the character, or wound the feelings of the most infiguisticant individual in fociety. Thave touched so man's private character; if that it infiamous to himself, and to him Make; let him andwer it—thein fluence of his bad example may not be very extensive. I rever the Laws of the Commonwealth, and delight in the folema and sober administration of them: a failure in this particular, and to correct it, has been, all the folema and sober administration of them: a failure in this particular, and to correct it, has been, all the folema and sober administration of them: a failure in this particular, and to correct it, has been, all the content of them. This is the fountuit head—here we look up, and have a right to expect the most exemplary conduct—public officers in fence fenfe give a complexion to the manners of the people—from this fource we take our direction, and the indisence of their good, or ill examples, is very diffinitive, and extends its effects to the remarked convex of the cousty. The private vietner of those Gentlement have never called a question, Many of them are extended to the remarked convex of the cousty. The private vietner of those Gentlement have never called a question, Many of them are extended to the content of the cousty. the remotes common to the country. In a private visture of those Gentlement have never called an question,
Many of them are entitled to much respect on that account, and the benevolent feelings of my foul, firong ly impel me, to drawa well over the public indiffertions of some of them—for charity boyeth all things.
The good qualitates of the mind alone never futted a man for every public office. There is a certain natural for every public office. There is a certain natural qualification which our Creator has formed to adapt to every flation & without which, & a competent knowledge of the Businets of his degarment, after newledge a figure, is was ever very useful to fociety. Minkind often whelly loofe the benefit which might be derived from the sublities of a Man, became he has firtyed away from the line of his profession, or occupation, and allowed a flation, to which matter nor his mental acquirements aver emittled him. I have keard many observations on the hearfays of the Auditor; but have never heard bim charged with telling a falle flory. I have heard form folks fay that he had taken a wrong method, that our Green Folks should have been converfed with privately on the fubject—this is the language of diffuterested friendship and perfectly according gauge or alianterisian Irandibuy and perfectly accords, with my feniments. Have they not been converfed with ?—if, not, why have their particular friends been deficient in fo high a branch of duty ?—The characters of public officers, I allow, are not wantomly to be afterfed—a great degree officiency ought to be observed. What the Anditor objects too, has not been done. lerred. What the Anditor objects to, has not been done in a Corner, neither is it of retent date—the county has long wept in fecter places on that account. I have heard it affect why the Anditor did not. Inform them of his intentions—an has no claim to any particular connection, and from his flation in life could not be juffified in the attempt. He first heard that the cordial friends of frome of them have diffcharged their done that the beneficial influence of their could and dial friends of ione of them have difenarged their da-y; but that the beneficial influence of their good ad-vice has been of fhort duration. Have heard, it faid that a deputation from the County should have waited on the Gendlemen, and acquainted them with the dif-difection of the good people, and folicited a refiguration. By what ambority could (sch a. deputation be-made? If any such as thority exists, 1 ask why it has not been exercised? Some of the objective I keen, have pro-posed the very method the Argitur has adopted. It wrong, why has no person come forward, and in some more proper method account of the cannot be indian-uitated, or has the county is not ridiculed in every year of the Commonwealth, on their account. I have stated, or that the county is not ridicated in every part of the Commonwealth, on their account. I have head othern fay that fome of them flouid have been impeached, and that it was the duty of the Reputetatives of the county to have done is. They have not; and the critishas a long time sod fill continue—it is not at all fingular, but there flouid be a difference of opinion in this beforefa. There is formething in head of the critish of the county of the count man nature that disposes to forget an offence, and com-pusionate the offender. It is an excellent quality of the heart, and tends to meliorate, and tame the seccethe neart, and tenus to meanurus, and time me necro-pations of the fool, to check and regulate its wild and otherwife excentric motions. I never came forth with my rod in my hand, from choice. All my feelings were atmed against the attempt, and my heart has bled my rou in my dand, from choice. All my feelings were armed against the attempt, and my heart has bled at every fory I have told. If may be afterd, why then did you come forth? I fay por from vanity, or perforality—not, because their myfelf bett qualified—but fond ity—not, because I then opyful best qualified—but from a deep conviction of the nectsity, of the measure. I have long waited the admonitions of friends and the winings of abler pens—but in vain. I love the coun-ty in which I dwell, and delight in the good order and government of it—to response the good order and government of it—to response the good order and government of it—to response the good order and foreit—and to promote these who with dignity and submitted the submitted in the submitted of the submitted in the submitted and with of is the enly object and with of THE AUDITOR.
