But then, my the advocates of Duelling, if you confure this practice as bafe, and wholly for it afide, you throw the doors wide open to perpetual infult, and the away all refraint on good decourm and manners; and as the prefervation of honour is equally dear to a man as life irielf. Duelling is the only redress when that it invaded: But if the prefervation of this fort of hoseur, which neither law nor equity can re-lieve, be of such moment, fortly the acquisition of it may be equally so; and where men have no real title to it besides, they may seek occasion to purchase it in this way. . But to afcertain, in some degree, how far honour is concerned in Duels, we mail go back to the more frequent of their caufes, and they will appear nine times out of ten, to originate either from jealoufy, gambling, or intoxication! Honour is studed round with all the virtues of the human foul, and does not herd with the debauches of a brothel, or the plotters of female the debauches of a brothel, or the plotters of femule rion—is not acquainted with the tricks of a gaming table, nor the fiquability of midnight revelling—is not there envious, injuitions, creel, nor defaming—but abous them all, and will not have her name called in question by any of them; as the is of too high defects, too chafe, and too aniable to be related to the caufes, fo the diffaint to acknowledge the confequences, and too proof to affective with their abettors; but the Datility will go on to produce a cale, where honour, and that only, is so aggivered and so circomfanced, that no similar protects can be had elsewhere, and therefore no fuitable redrefs can be bad elfewhere, and therefore has recourse to the pistol for that facisfaction, which neither law nor equity have provided for. If even this were the fast, what satisfaction to a reasonable man were the fact, what interaction to a realonable man does a dual afford?—Will it putify his charafter if contaminated before? And if it be only for the fake of posithing the transferedior, he cannot do that with our involving himself in the same correction, (a fatal one perhaps too) and true honour does not allow fuch gross injudice, and unprovoked crocity.
