(TRAMELATED FROM THE FRENCE.)

THE motion of the earth around the fan is improfed by philosophers to proceed from an attractive and projective power combined, producing a suiform progrets of the earth in her other. But it appears to me that the more most of a man walking upon the growth might as well be accounted for upon thefe two principles as the motion of the earth. The certifying all adventrificial powers appear to metobare no more real emittence as the world space of the heaves, than the imaginary circles of the zodiac and the equator. However capable thefe supposed have may be of answering every purpose, they are in fact anothing more than a more featboding, imagined by men of genius, whereby to creft the fabric of natural feience, but which exercised the fabric of natural feience, but which exercise the fabric of natural feience, but which exercise the more than a mere featboding; imagined by men of genius, whereby to creft the fabric of natural feience, but which exercise the producing of the transition of the reaches the featboding which we make also of in building our chartches to penetrate into the point and the capable of the property of the producing the producing which we make a feet of the producing the producing the producing the countricity. In fair, these supposed powers are no more than merefigus, invented to account for objects they unght to represent, the fune arother arbitrary figs, of human insention. ought to represent, the fame as other arbitrary figes, seman intention.

If it was the centriferal motion that threw up mounhaman intention.

If it was the centrifugal motion that threw up mountains upon the globe when it was in a liquid flate, there ought in reality to be mountains upon the earth wally higher than the Andes of Feru and Cilli. The mountain Chimborato near the expator, and which is the highest we there know acf, has only 3220 feet of elevation, or according to others, 3370 for the calculations do not eartily agree in this particular).—This degree of elevation is lefs, fentible upon the earth than the third partof a line would be upon a globe fix feet disameter. Now, a mais of mellend matal, cast in any proportion whetever, would exhibit accidental prompherancis much more considerable on its furface, in refrech this disattiety than any actual inequalities on the furface; its disattiety than any actual inequalities on the furface of the carth. Look at the roughness on a hist of the drafts of iron; what horrid fusions and chaffus then would have been formed on a globe of heterogepous melted nature of nearly three thousands leagues is diameter?—According to Casini, the moon, which is a much finaller, plobe than the earth, has mountain acts there is pages in the years of the first pages in the survey of the surv which is a much smaller good than the earth, has mountain agest inter leggers in helping. But what would have been those feedlings and credites, if we add to this heterogeneous mass in a melted flate, a centification of the produced by the rotation of the earth on its

I believe this force, shich must have seled the most energy at the counter, inflead of farming a globe would have produced bodies fimilar to the glats plates or feales which we fee blown up in the glats boule.

The diameter of the earth is not greater under the equator than under the meridians; nor are its moun-tains at or near the equator more elegated than elfe-where. The celebrated Andes of Peru, do not take their rifeat the equator, bulleveral degrees beyond it no the foothward, and extending from theact to Peru, Chili, and the Magellamic regions, reminate at the firity fifth degree of foothlatinude, near Terra del Fuego where they from topoo the ocean in a promontory of exernal ire, of a flapendons height. In this whole extent, they have no opening till you come to the freights of Magellan, forming in all other places an immenfe belwark, with pyramids of fnow inexceffible to men, and the probability of the property of the their rife at the equator, but leveral degrees beyond in belwark, with pyramids of Inow, instectibile to men, health, and exert oblified. On-the-contrary the moun-tains about the Ithmus of Passum, in the vicinity of the line, are not comparable to the Andrea. In height, and are even to far inferior, that Lord Andron, who consided the whole of South America, relates, that when hecume into this latitude he experienced the most viclenc heats "owing (lays he) to the six not being any longer refreshed by the temperature of, the atmosphere from the high mountains of Chill and Peru."

The highest mountains in Asia are constantly found
