

MONODY on the death of a YOUNG LADY.

PERHAPS kind heaven in mercy dealt the blow,
Some living from thy roving soul torn out;

Forgive me Heaven! yet, yet tears will flow,
To think how soon my fancy's bliss is past!

Through valley, grove, and grove;
Nought can their beauties ever lose restore;

And thou, my little cherub, left behind,
To hear a father's plaints, to share his woes,

How oft my little cherub, left behind,
To hear a father's plaints, to share his woes,

How oft my little cherub, left behind,
To hear a father's plaints, to share his woes,

How oft my little cherub, left behind,
To hear a father's plaints, to share his woes,

How oft my little cherub, left behind,
To hear a father's plaints, to share his woes,

Try mother's virtues and her fate I tell,
Say, wilt thou drop the tender tear,
