On the 14th in the morning, M. Dumouriez attacked us at the post of Roux aux Buis, with about 6000 men; but our troops defeated themselves with their usual bravery, and that post having been reinforced by two battalions and two squadrons, they were repulsed with considerable loss, and obliged to pass the river Aisne in the greatest disorder.

The advantage which we have gained by this affair, cannot compensate for the loss we sustained in the death of Prince Charles de Ligne, colonel of the regiment, whose excellent character, military talents, activity, and great activity, makes him justly regretted, happened on by the ardor of his zeal and courage, he marched forward with a few men only; towards the enemy's artillery, and was killed by a bullet (a cartouch) which unfortunately struck him.

Our loss besides consists of 4 officers wounded and 30 rank and file either killed or wounded.

LONDON, September 12.
M. de Merveilles has published, in the Leyden Gazette, the following address to the army lately commanded by him.

"At a time, when after having occurred in two great victories, I enjoyed in retirement the success of my constant efforts for the cause of the people, the dangers of the country reached me from a private life; I came in the middle of the applause of the nation, to command the army which the king had entrusted to me; and the National Assembly deigned, by the organ of its President, to say to me, "We oppose to the enemies collected against us, the constitution and La Fayette."

"You will remember, I fear, with uneasiness, that a tumultuous faction whose movements appeared to me to correspond with those of our enemies, endeavoured to deprive us of that which makes the source of a free people, respect for the laws and fidelity to the constitution, which in this moment seemed to me to be our only point for rallying. My conduct was known to, and my opinions were stated by you; my frankness animated more and more against me all the enemies of the constitution; but whatever were their efforts and their menaces, the National Assembly, by a majority of two thirds, repulsed their absurd accusations heaped up against me. You know the violence exercised on the next day to the National Assembly, the fate of Paris at the moment when the suspension of the King was declared; the murder, the prosecutions which took place, not only during the battle at the Tuilleries, but even during the following days. I refer in this respect to the decrees of the department of Ardennes, and of the municipality of Sedan and to the few accounts which were suffered to pass while all the papers devoted to the Jacobin party, were circulated with profusion. It was evident, that the measures taken on the 10th of August were forced from the National Assembly. This convulsion guided my conduct. The administrative bodies and the municipalities required you to renew the oath, and the constitution has determined this oath, and ordered you to obey the regulations of the constituted authorities. It was with regret that I saw a part of the army far from the fulfillment of this duty, that I would have spared them the evil of refusing it. The pains taken to calumniate me in your opinion, have succeeded so far as to alienate a part of your confidence. On the other side, the communications of the National Assembly, who had accepted, on the 10th of August, the execution of the decree which violence had forced from them, deprived me of a command from Dumouriez to Manbeuge; and they proposed equally to delimit me of that which united me to you, and to renew against me those accusations which neither the Assembly, the jurists, or the judges, were any longer free to decide upon, in the state to which violence had reduced them.
