The Duke of Brunfwick has tarnilhed the glory of the Praffian army, and revised the courage of the delponding democrats. His infolence in the profpet of facefs will prevent compation in the featon of calamity. Though this diffeometine may be steribed to the immediate interpolition of Providence, yet noapology can forcen him from the imputation of precipitancy in moderaking the expedition, and rathnets in him mode of rondeleng it. Irreflects little bonour on the wildom of candedrates, to allege they were decived by the entire that princes. The pumpered minions of a voloptional court, and the unprincipled invaden of their country's freedom, were entitled to no protection, and unworthy of any confidence; and the view of miliforume might extor lettle even for guilty infirerent, yet it cannot justify the monarchap Fruffic and Austria in participating their conneils and conforming to their directions. But commiferation for the exiles was not the true points for engaging in the Little political fagacity was requiped to their products. Little political fagacity was requiped to their products. On Saturday bit the in to forefer the confequences of the French Revo-lation; the apprehension of its influence swallowed up minuter concerns, and sufpended the insignificant quarrets of opposing princes. A fullem of military government was to be substituted for that which is founded on the rights of man. Employed in this im-portant object, the court of Berlin, deaf to its true inpointer on the gray of mas. Employed in Lyss inpointer object, the court of Berlio, deaf to list true interedit; and regardlefs of the faith of treaties, abadened the patriotic forereign of Foland and it bave inhabitants, to the detelled ambition of the old Ruffian fociety from another impution of the Sythian tribes.

His advocates, however, speak condidently of the renewing of his attempt against France in the ending spring.
But the gallant defence of Thionrille, the increating numbers and returning discipline of the French armirs, and the magnaminty of the Convention in renombers and returning discipline or the free or miss, and the magnanimity of the Convention in refusing to treat until he had evacuated their territories, may teach him that the enthusiasm which the energies may teach him that the enthulialm which the energies of truth and freedom inspire, will ultimately prevail over the utmost exertions of disciplined valour, and the most configurate improvements in military rec-tices. Mean time, those who are thocked with the ha-miliation of desposition in Paris, may be hold its philan-thropy in the bombardment of Liste, and the deflue-tion of the property of its magnificence in the fulltion of the property of its magnificence in the fulni-nation of impotent manifelioes, when its expiring vic-tims were perifling diffegarded on the plains of

There is a second or a personnel tranquility in India.

There is a difference between the French and A merican Revolution. InAmerica no barbarities were perpetrated—no men's heads were fluck upon poles—no ladies budies mangled, were carried through the fireets in triumph—their prifoners guarded and signed, were not mafficred in cold blood. The American did not, at difference, barries, murder, or plander the Clergy—nor roat their General, unjusty alive.—They fer Ilmits to their vices, at which their parfoits reflect. And whatever blood was fined, flowed gallandy in the field. The American Revolution, it cough to be repeated, was not accomplished as the French has been by maffications, or proferiptions; battles, fevere and honorable, were fought, and the chance of war left to decide.
