The fame wretch, whose existence difgraces the name of man, adds, that the con-cubine of Marat imitated Miria in the care the took of the friend of the people; and that the faved the God of the republic from the dagger of La Fayette, by which he must else have fallen.

Brochet followed this licentions blaf-themer, and faid, " that our Redeemer having defended kings, was not to be com-pared to Marat, who had been the most in veterate enemy of kings and their thrones."

This infernal fitting was determined by an offer of Henriot, the commandant of the Parifian fans culottes, who promifed to formith pinks, carnations, cypreffes and rofes to adorn the putrid corple of Marat.

nother party of the favages killed a woman Morgan confessed to have published, and I has lost upwards of 3000 inhabitants fince the 3d of August. This is a dreadful calamity, and has entirely ruined trade, as many of the principal merchants are numbered with the dead! There are also hundreds of orphans put under the care of the overfeers of the poor, and many widows.-Every thing feems to be at a fland.

"All bufiness, building, and entertainments are flopped. A committee fits night and day at the Court House, to regulate the conveyance of the infected persons to Bush Hill, and to fend carts for the dead bodies. The committee act with great prodence and humanity
