The IMPORTANCE OF PUNCTUALITY. The Interestance of PUNCTUALITY.

If faults are to be elimited according to the ill confequences which attend them, we thall find upon examination, that the want of ponetuality is a crime of considerable magnitude. A very large flaue of the dispopintments and versitions which we meet with in our interecutie with one cashes it derived from this fource. In mother, is derived from this fource. In almost all companies, or accidental meet-ings of Neighbours, the ear is pained with complaints against those who have not paid an expected debr, or not performed a ne-cessary jobb, or not finished a pair of shoes, ceffary jobb, or not faithed a pair of those, zee, at the time prefixed. In the comotivy, tradefimen and absourers are up to fail in punctuality, fometimes through mere instruction and careledfaces, fonetimes through indolese and lexiness, fometimes through a graping disposition, and always from a criminal difregard to truth honeity, and benevolence. Wishing to fecure at the custom and business they can, and on-selling that any who apply to them, the enfrom and business they can, and on-seilling that any who apply to them, should be necessitated to apply to others, they engage more than they can possibly execute within the time limited, to the great disappointment, vexation and injury of their employers.

Every person of the least reflection must herry perion of the sear renetion infect that the advantages which would refult to individuals, to neighborhoods, and to large communities, from purcluality, are very great:—And that equally great are the disadvantages from the want of it. A poor man with a boule full of children, procures with difficulty a bushel of corn, procures with difficulty a bushel-of-corn, and a borfe to earry is fee or fix miles to a mill. The miller cannot grind it now, but promites to have it ready by the creating of the next 'day. With fill greater difficulty be again obtains a borfe, & goes at the time perfixed; but is coldly tald by the miller, that be forgot it, and ground fee them: for others till his water was focut, as he must come again the next day. A man who is building a house, engages masons, and tenders at a distance to build his chim-But the man who had promifed to bring his hands the day preceeding, and com-pleat the flone work for the foundation of the chimnies, fails ; and all are disappoint ed, to their very great damage... A wois pitted by her neighbors; and they kind-ly collect on a certain day, and reap down all her grain. She engages a man to fe-He promifes to take it up th cure it. He promites to take it up the most day, and carry it into the lam. He mgl (fit to come and, it being Saunday the grain is left lying in the field. On Menday it raits. And the weather proving wet and warm for feveral days, the hopes of the widow and fatheriefs are de-hopes of the widow and fatheriefs at defiroyed.

PunGuality is fometimes difregarded by professional gentlemen, to the great loss and disappointment of those for whom they and dilappointment of those for whom they were to trainfel fame befines of coole-quence. The gay world confider exci-nci, regularity, the difficient of promiles, and the punchal payment of boneli debts, is not rulgar for them; and value them-felres on to punchasity, but in their debts of honor, their criminal affiguations, or monor, their parties of pleasure, and their appointed value. The commercial world, in general regard punctuality, because it is the bassof all their circuit and interest. And certainly it would be for the interest and certainly it would be for the interest and credit of merchanicky, labourers, and in short, of every class of men. To be punc-tual in faibiling their promites and engage-ments, would have a happy effect you all the civil and moral intercourses of society. Moreal confidence, effects, and afrection, would be increased: neighbors would live on better terms; and the heart be more on better terms, and the fleady, that quil and joycus.

Ponchuality, must be an bonor to any man, because it denotes shelliny, fortitude and superiority to temptation. If this has not been rasked by many among the carnot been racked by rame among the difficulty of defining it with precifion, or of difficulty of defining it with precifion, or of diffinguithing it from others, and not from its unimportance in fociety. Accorately speaking, punctuality is not a fin-gle virtue, but an affemblage of many-lt Camblets, appehends fidelity, veracity, fenfe of or, justice, and benevolence. Fonchality is recommended by almost every object and every movement in the callmaneous natural world, as well as by the exigencies and claims of the moral. It is well known, though not foriently conferred, like, Green hat all the revolutions of the hazverly both and the revolutions of the hazverly between the revolutions o that all the revolutions of the exacted pundies are performed with the exacted punctuality. What would become of all the inhabitants of the earth, 23 well as of promife breakers, if the fun and the feafons were as fallible, and as little to be depended ed on, as themfelves ?—Punfluality then, has the fanction of beaven upon it, and the has the function of nearest original region and Chiptees, and Chiptees, in Its utility and importance are demon-firsted by the interest and reputation of the Shawla.

individual, and by the prace and happiness of fociety. And the necessity of it is incolcated by the diffates of conscience, and the command of God. .
