cepting the battle of Fleurus.
Martiricht has now loft all hopes of being relieved; a fland for our armies near the banks of the Rhine isoffered; the ene-try is exiled to the other fide of that river; the road to Holland is opened; our winter quarters are protected; and we are mafters quarters are protected; which the provinces of all the reloutees, which the provinces of Limburg, Cologue, Treves, Luxemburgh and foliersoffer.

The enterprize was also the most difficult their forces; their army amounted to Eo, coo men; all the advantages of art and anture, were on their fide; but we had the advantage of cobrage, confidence, and the remembrance of our glorious exploits: And what are the obfiques of nature and art,in comparison to the genius of liberty and the love of our Country!

Citizens all your exterior enemies are now hombied, and flying; the armies were confiquently the first, in accomplishing their talk; it belongs now to se, to accomplish ours; for our warniors have imposed on us the duty, to crash the interior enemies on us the duty to cruth the interior enemies of the Republic.

Citizens, the triumphant armies obey your voice; and fhould a few intriguers be fuffered to diffate leave in the half of the convention? No! It is time that the national representation should feize with its giganic arms all the factions; that it fhould reduce the factions to their nullity, by defining them against each other; it is time at left to agnounce, that the Convention will be the depository of the rights of the people, and annihilate those who shall dare to put their hypocritical or forious bands

You faw, by my fall difpatches, that the Auffrign army were defeated on the 18th & 20th Sept. in mais on the river Roer, and confifted of between 60 and 60 thousand men. On the 22d September we took Aix In-Chapelle, and our simy encamped in the plain of Aldenboven; its laft wing the pairs of Managaren is an wing furported on the Worm, and the right wing extended to Schwiller, on the Dante.

The defign of the enemy was to defend the pairage over the Ruer, and to effect a communication with Macfiricht; a flrong detechment of the Auffrian army was, to that effect, possed on the left bank of the Roer, and occupied the famous position behind Aldenboven and before Juliers, which, already firong by nature, was be fides fortified with a chain of redoubts, and almost impregnable in all its points.

We were determined to pursue our facerfies; and Jourdan refolved to force the last entreachments of the enemy. To en-fore forces, it was necessary to have re-course to one of those skilful and bold ma coorfe to one of thole Salfal and bold ma-nonives, which, if executed by experience ed. fifters and intrepid foldiers, render-all-awaithe greated enterprizes possible; for, the Reer, thou, fordable in many place, was (wals by the rain, which fell fines ten-days). Which formed the main force of the 'army. The Generals, Hatty, Moriot; Champunett and Dubois were under his orders. General Schüter was orderest to force the passage of Dueren; Kleber to direct the march of his column towards Keintherg, and the advanced guard to attach Linnich, whilf the main force should be occupied in sweeping away the camp before Juliers.

Yefterday at 5 o'clock all the columns began their march; the different corps atracked with equal courage; the camp Juliers was forced, and all the redoub were taken with an intrepidity without ex-ample and in less than two hours.

The cavalry of the enemy appeared, t cover their setreat ; but they were charged, routed, purfued to the glacis of Juliers fouted, portuen to the glass of 1 mitts, immort in color for the am campaign.

The other columns were equally foccefs-ful, but they met with difficulties of another kind. When the advanced guard appeared before Lineich, the enemy had defiroyed the bridge and fet fire to the town; all the fliges being rendered impracticable, our publicans were obliged to brave a terrible fire of fmall arms and artillery, while they were occupied in re-effablishing the bridges. Our artillery began now to then-der, and in this, as well as in every former occasion, proved its inperiority over that of the enemy, who were forced to abandon their redoubts and to retreat. The passage over the river could hower er not be entirely effected, because it was found impossible to build the bridges before night. All was prepared to cross the Roer this morning, when after the fall of a thick fog we discovered on the other bank of
