tees of the National Convention."

About this time, a quarrel began between the National Convention, and the Jacobins. This fociety, so proud and powerful, received a humiliating stoke in the overthrow of Rehessivers, whom they, or at least a part of them, endeavoured to the last, to support. Their meetings coaled for several depth but at last came to gether, and with but an ill grace, felicitated the Convention upon the fortunate discovery of the configuracy, and set of the Traitors—and declared themselves cur devoted to the principles of the Revolution, and ready at all times, to support the Convention, who, upon this trying occasion, had proved themselves the guardians with such as the support the configuration of the support the convention, who, upon this trying occasion, had proved themselves the guardians with such as the support the convention of the support the Convention, who, upon this trying occa-lisp, had proved themfelves the guardians and faviors of the Republic. This thow of friendflip, however, had but a flight district they had loft their popularity, and the Convention had gained it—this was fufficient to give place to envy—and they took the full opportunity to find fault with the proceedings of that hady, which they wished to rivid. The Convention. they wished to rival. The Convention, they withed to rival. The Convention, among many other afts to forten the rigors which had marked the proceedings of the fact faction, had opened the prifest does, and fer at themy great numbers of perfors whom Robeffierer had careful to be arreful ed; and who may waited their turn to the convention of the convention bleed at the guillatine. At this after len-ity, the Jacobius brgan bittedy to com-plain—they declared that the enemies of the Republic, were reflored to liberty the Republic, were reflored to liberty— that Arifloratery and Mederatifin, began every where to raife their aedacioes beads; and inveighed against the Convention, for discontinuing: these severe, but fallenty measurer, which had conducted the zero-lation that far, which here its reserving in lation that for, which kept its raemies in due fobjection, and which slone could fave due folicition, and which also ane could fave the Republic. They addressed the other Popular Societies in, and about Paris, and castled upon them to he upon their guard against their moderate measures, and preserve holdly intimated, that there was a new faction forming in the Councention, which, under the pretence of rooting up the feeds of the old, were in fast endeavouring to chabitish a sorte upon its rains—and that they had adopted this mild plan, as the most likely to ferre their ends, whill the pullions of the people were warm against that party who had moved in the upposite extreme. They received, or pre-rended to receive, and published addresses from a great number of forcieties, in different parts of the Republic, which declared themselves deverted to the Jacobins, and joined with them in writefling that the new proceedings, only favoured the Anti-tocrass, and that these even began to optorrais, and that there even began to op-prefs the Patriots—they were howeverse-cufed of framing theleaddreffes themselves. On the other hand the Convention were Bable, eter returned to their families or clicked framing theleaddreffes themselves. About the first of September, the Jecobins expelled TALLIER, (one of the National Assembly, and the principal one in denouncing Romespierral from their for ciery, and a night or two after, this mem-ber was affaulted in the fireethy an affaffin, who discharged a pistol at and wounded who discharged a piffel at and wounded bim in the flouidler; the wound proved not defigerate, and it was not long be-fore he was able to take his feat and to Convention again.
