

LONDON, March 14.
Letter from His Majesty, the King of Poland, to Mr. Gardner, Envoy Extraordinary from Great Britain, at Warsaw.

My dear Gardner,

Since the official connection which existed between you and me seems to be near an end, and, as I have no hopes to see you again, I think it my interest to wish you a farewell, and its truly from the bottom of my heart. In the latter you will retain your place until my death; and I hope we shall be found together, in that place where righteous souls and good hearts, according to my belief, will be united for ever. Every etiquette and ceremonious custom is now totally interrupted between you and me. At least as to myself, I shall never have the trouble of observing again the Diplomatical rules and customs; but I shall always confess that I love and honour our King and your Nation—this is what I desire you to tell them. I will also that you may also preserve a remembrance and affection towards your friend. Since I cannot any more converse with you in person, my miniature will now and then make you think on

(Signed)

STANISLAUS AUGUSTUS, Rxr.,
Envoy from Mr. Gardner, the Britis Envoy to his Polish Majesty.

The 1st; which your Majesty did me the honor of writing to me from Grindon, and which I received yesterday, has moved me to tears, and will constantly cause emotions within me whenever I shall think on it I shall gratefully thank your Majesty for the miniature you did me the honor to send me. It is doubly dear to me for coming from your hands, and from presenting me with the idea of your person. The image of your Majesty, the excellence of your character, your distinguished kindness towards me, and your misfortunes, shall be engraved on my heart, and never be effaced from my mind. May just Heaven in future grant to your Majesty the fate which your virtue deserves, and may he restore that calm within your soul, which is so necessary after so many storms! I shall always pray for the welfare of your Majesty; and I entreat your Majesty occasionally to think on a person, who always feels the most profound respect, and the most perfect esteem for your Majesty. Please to accept of the assurance of my true submission to your future commands. I have the honor to be, Sir, your Majestys humble servant.

(Signed) GARDINER, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of His Britannic Majesty.

March 17.—According to letters from Tula, the late revolution has cost that ill-fated country 80,000 men in killed and wounded; and about 40,000 fled into Galitzia.

The British force of Liege has raised a corps of 10,000 men for the French Republic, to serve in the next campaign.

An American Captain arrived on Sunday from Nauvoo, who reports that on the 3d inst. the Republican G<sup>r</sup>eneral Houché, accompanied by two Commissioners of the Convention, entered that city with much ceremony, for the purpose of receiving the public submission of Charette, and several leaders of the late counter-revolutionary army. At noon the approach of Charette was announced by the return of an immense crowd of persons, who had gone from the city to meet him, and by an universal shout of Vive le République! He was accompanied also by several thousand of his late troops, disarmed; but himself and the other leaders wore their swords, until they reached the front of the Mission de Ville, where they delivered them to General Houché, and received them again from him. The whole body wore the tricoloured cockade, and the number was so great, it was necessary to send a large supply of bread from the army into the city. A subscription had also been privately made for supplying clothes to those of the Lavenderans who were in want.

Affecting Scene.

On the evening of the 22d ult. as a young lad, son of Mr. Speckars, about 12 years of age was riding on an errand to a neighbourhood, he, by some unlucky means fell from his horse, his foot hanging in the stirrup iron, as was supposed, he was dragged among the stampa of trees, till his head was mangled in several places, and his clothes stripped from his body. By what means he was released is unknown; but he was soon after found in the road, in an expiring condition, and unable to relate the circumstances of his accident.
