ted within the prefent century. At eleven of look, his Excellency Earl Fitzwilliam, afters to town, without equalitian sufficient held his last levee, which, for brilliancy ance: The quadrapeds were immediately and-norabers, eclipfed any thing of the unbarrefled and feveral bondred bipeds, fort which we recolled to have feen at St. | vied for the honour of drawing that James's. His Excellency continued about an hour and an half in the 100m, receiving the cordial compliments of the true | thouland voices of all orders of the people, fireds of the earlier, for his particle, in the people, after which, the multimed feparated in fund many with an affability and manner pe- funds anotherly manner as reflects the highcultarly his own. Never, perhaps, was there more unaffected fincerity beheld at any Coart. If the melancholy occasion did not affered the feast of reason, it at least called forth the flow of foul.

At one o'clock, his Lordship and his a-their roote to the water ide, attended by a prodigious exvaleade of carriages. The fightful to five the first the fi ed with the garrifon, and their excellen-cies were escorted by flrong detachments of Ligonier horse, and Lord Jocelyn's fencitle cavalry. All the thops were that, and the generality of the inhabitants appeared in deep mourning. It is not easy to afford an idea of the awfulnels of the frene. The proplace carefully abbained from riot, but they were loud in their exe-erations against the British cabines, and the plunderers and facculators, whole dark agency procured the recal of fo indepen-dent zed honest a man.

In College Green, a number of most ref-pefiable gentlemen in black, infifted on taking the horfes from the carriage and drawing it in triumph to the Pigeon houle. The effect of this condescention on his Lordhip's franhility, was most interesting —the tear of affection was feen filently to —the tear of affection was feen filently to feel down his manly cheek, and from the most landable femoathy, the crowd in an inflant were bedimmed with watery eyes. This interchange of feotiment—the folemu frene it prefented, was one of the grandest and most sublime speciales in naure.— Contrasted with the tinfel trappings and a venal homage of absolute monarchs, it held up a leffon in which they may read their own infignificance.

Lady Fitz villiam wifted, as cuftomary on such occasions, to diffribate money a-mong the lower orders; but the protest man with the noblest enthusiasm, rejected the offer, and the air refounded with the cries of " no money, no money!"-their common object being to sopport the man common object need to hopport the man while in their power, for his virtua and integrits, whose loss they read he under the needing to deplete. A condect so interested, fostened even the hard nearl of which the drayount are naturally componed; their looss encouraged the mob-more than the state of the needed o to not, but to thew that they were worthi-er fools than men in their costs. Walle the cavalcade were advancing firmly, and fuch a prodigious concourfe o people diffinguished for uniting a fobriety of demeanour, with fortow of heart, the hopeful guardians of the city were all buftle and preparation, as if an inforrection was menzeed. The vefity rooms in different quarters of the city, were converted into goz: I houses, and crowded with arm-ed men—a glorious occasion was awaited, in which the papick of their threatened diffiletion might beavenged, & the chiefs of the clan might be enabled to "" Cry barreck, and let flip the dogs of war."

But, fortunately, no appearance of ex-cels having taken place, the cannoncers extinguished their matches, and the fol-diery were allowed to return to their bar-

At length the trying hour of feparation arrived, at which the feelings of all parties were wand up to the higher jitch. Every fenfation that could wring the heart was experienced by all ranks and conditions. Not a word was fpoken for fome tight repeled in them, which was usual time. In this moment of disperse, it was the control of the countenance that was locked to look the countenance that was looked to look the look that was looked to look the look that look that look the look that look that look the look that look that look the look that look take away with her their darling, and the hopes and prespects of Ireland! They heard him articulate in a few words his at-techment to Ireland and Irith interfles; and furrounded by a band of honest councellos. they had the pain to fee his exit amidft the loud lamentations of the people, which not even the poile of camon could drown.

Grattan, until the fame vehicle with the Yefferday will be remembered as the Hon. Mr. Connolly, strafted the stren-moff ominous and faralday that has occur-ted within the prefent century. At eleven infifted on conveying those favorite chartlemen to the house of Mr. Fo dare firret, amid acclamations from ten eft credit on their conduct.

CATHOLICK MEETING Yefferday a most numerous and respect able meeting of the Roman Catholicks of this city, was held in Francis street chapel,

Mr. Edward Byrne, one of the delegate in a coordic forech, informed the meeting, that, pursuant to the infirections which he and the gentlemen who were affociated with him in the delegation had received. they had prefented their address to his majelly ; but he should refer them for a more that bulinels, to a gentleman who was af fociated with him on that honographe and partant truft, who was then prefent.

Mr. Keogh went at great length into detail of what peffed between the Doke of Portland and the Delegates on the fot-ject of their million; and flated, that after prefenting their address to his majefly, they applied to his grace to know if his majefly leasing their address to his majetly, they applied to his gracers know if his majetly had communicated to him, any activer to their address? 17 of his his grace declined evings, any answer; but he told them that his majetly's intentions thould be imparted through the medium of the Lord Lieuen through the medium of the Lord Lieu. Mr. Ke. Line, Satinett and Laftines. ogh took a very comprehensive view of the relative situation of this country, with respect to Great Britain; of the insults we have received from her, and the benefits we reader to her. He then adverted to the circumfiances attending the American war; when America, before, the reforted to arms, complained of her privileges a-bridged, of having feat departs with adto arms, complained of her privileges a-heidged, of having fent deputies with ad-drell's to Geen Britain, flating their grievances; of their addrells being re-jected—their deputies being unfrecelsful, and the venerable Franklin being treated with infolds. The confequence was that A-merica was fevered from Great Britain. land, and after reprobating the conduct of the British cabinet towards this country, concluded a fpeech replete with grea energy and firength of argument, with ex-prefing a with, that no further question on fubject of Catholick emancipation confider ourfeives as united with Irithmen of every description. He bestowed the highest cologium on his Protestant fellow Subjects, particularly the inhabitants of Belfaff, who flood foremost in the cause of the emancipation of the Catholicks. A numerous army was pre-pred, while the democratic agents of the meantion, who fill had the executive substitution in their bauds at Lyons, spared spins in endeavouring to drive the city what ther termed open rebellion, and The doffring of equality, for flattering to the who poffers nothing, had gained then many converts among the lower class of the people. To these were committed lauthority, civil and military, and it i an amounty, civil and malitary, and it is hully necessary to fay that they exceeded nery species of tyranny that envy, re-large, and popular fory could invent.— All this was borne with a degree of resig-nition that has justly been regarded as a smilling, in prople who have since rightly. ivocal proofs of inheren our. This act of felf prefervation was called result against the republic, and in con-fequence of it, the convention passed decree upon decree, bearing death and de-firection against the Lyonele. Thus, those very men who had formed a conflitution which declares relifiance against oppres fion to be a natoral right, passed an act of profeription against a whole city, because tiey had dated to lift their hands to guard their throats against the knives of a band of essession!

The city now began to arm for its dethe city now began to arm for its de-fence; but being torully compensed for a firge, having arither fortifications not magazines, and being meased on every fide by mittads of ferocloss enemies, the prople were backward in deciding for hability, knowing that, in that cale death or sidney on he had that the feeth or sidney on he had the feeth or sidney of he had the had the had the feeth or sidney of he had the had the had men who had the courage to take up arms; men who man inconsiste to take up aims; but the desperate bravery of these amply made up for every want. During the space of fixteen days they withstood an army fiscent times their strength, plentifularmy inteen times their arranges, pressured by provisioned, and provided with every influence of definition. Never, perhaps, were there such feats of valour per-formed as by this little army; thrice their number did they lay dead before their in

The members deputed from the Con-vention, to direct the attack, left nothing vention, to direct the strack, left nothing untried that might tend to the accomplishment of their object. They faceceded at left, an epacing a communication with their partizans in the city, and in feducing many of the mobit of spoule their interest. This was the mote cally to effect, as the befieged were, by this time upon the point of flarving; the flesh of hories, dogs, and cars, had been for fome days their only food, and even that began to grow exthe least hopes of forcour, fame of those who wished well to their city, and had not who withed well to their, city, and had not borne arms during the fiege, undertook to capitulate eith the enemy; but thefe know-ing the extremetres to which they were driven, infifted upon executing the decrees

The belieged, then, feeing no hopes of a capitalistion, feeing the city without another days providion, and the total impossibility of fisecust from without (being completely invested on every fide,) had her now medice to whose the second of the contraction but one meafare to adopt; to cut their way through the enemy, or fall in the attempt. A plan of retreat was, therefore, fettle upon; the out palls were to be called in,

They had bardly began their march, when a discharge of artillery; bearing full upon them, these them into some confusion. every drup of blood as dear at politible.—
They broke off into platoons putting their wifes and children into the centre of each

The victors showed such mercy as might be expedied from them : not content with butchering their prifuners in said blood, they took a pleasure in making them did by inches, and infulfing them in the page of death. Placing feveral together, they killed one of them at a time, to render death more terrible to the reft. Neither fex nor sge had any weight with them; above two hundred women, thirty of whom had children at the breatt, whom conjugal love had led to follow their hufbands; more than fifty old men, whom filial piety had foatched from the affaffin's flab, were all molt favagely butchered. The death of Madame de Vifague deferves particular notice. This young lady was about feventree years of age, and very near her time of delivery : a parry of the democrata found her behind a hedge, to which place the had drawn her hofoand, who was in tally wounded. When the canibals dif-covered her, the was on her knees support-ing his head up her arm: one of them firing his head on her arm; one of them firtered her with his hanger, while a third

Such was the fury of the triumphant democrats, that the deputies from the Con-vention gave an order against burying the dead, till they had been cut in morfels, Tellet, the infamous Tollet, democration priell (that is to fay, an apoltate) of Tre

During these dreadful scenes the depa-ties from the Convention, who, were now repaired, and there breached his prejecwes nearly as follows. After having re-prefented Challier as a manyr, in the crufe of liberty, as the hero of the republic, and the averager of the people, he addreff-ed himself to the affembly in nearly their terms. 'Think,' faid be, of the erms. Think, tain he, or the married into which you are plonged by being the fervants and workmen of others; the no-the oriells, the proprietors, the rich fervants and workmen of others; the no-beas, the priviles, the proprietors, the rich of every defeription, have long been in a combination to rob the demonstrate, the real fine culotte republicant, of their birth right; go, citizens take what be-longs to you, and what you fhould have enjoyed long ago.—Nor must you flory, there, while there exists an aritherary in the buildings, half remains undone: down with those edifices, raifed for the profit or pleafare of the rich; down with profit or pleafare of the rich; down with them all: commerce and are are ufclefs to a warlike people, and defireftive of that foldime equality which France is determined to forced over the whole globe. He rold this collaved, this degraded populace, that it was the duty of every good citizen to different all those whom he knew to be guilty of having, in thought, word or deed, confpired mongst, word or deed, confuired seainst the republic. He exhotred them to fig to the offices (opened for receiving fact) acceptations,) and not to figure one lawyer, priet, or nobleman. He concluded this barangue, worthy of one of the damed, with declaring, that for a man to accode his own father was an aft of civilm worthwas transcraphing. thy a troe republican, and that to neeled it was a crime that should be punished with death.

The deeds that followed this diabolic exhortation were such as might be expect-ed. The blands radiants of democrats lefe not a house, not a hole unlearning a men and women were led forth from their boules with as little, ceremony as catale from their pens; the fquare where the guilloting flood was reddened with blood, like a flughter boule, while the piercing eries of the forviving relations were drowned in the most vaciferous howlings of Five Iz

Republique.

It is hard to fille the voice of nature, to flagoate the involuntary movements of the fool; yet this was attempted, and in four degree, effected, by the deposies of the Convention. Perceiving that thefe feenes of blood had foread a gloom over the coun-tenance of the innocent inhabitants, and that even fome of these foldiers feemed touched with a mpunction, they illured a mandate, declaring every one fulpected of aritheeracy, who should discover the least symptom of pity; either by his words or
