

five regiments, under general Colloredo; and one, of seven battalions of grenadiers, under general Werner.

It must be observed that Marshal Clairfayt directed his real attack upon the most commanding and the strongest parts of the camp; because the immediate retreat of the enemy's whole army was the inevitable consequence of success on that point.

The attack commenced in this order at half an hour past five in the morning. The disposition was executed with the utmost precision, in a very short time the battle was decided in favor of the Austrians, who displayed incomparable discipline and bravery. The general officers finding that they could not advance on horseback on account of the rapidity with which the troops retreated, were compelled to dismount and enter the encampments on foot, at the head of the troops. The enemy did not in the least expect to be attacked, and although they certainly had some time to prepare for their defense from the difficulties that the Austrian troops had to encounter in approaching the works, yet it is to the unexampled intrepidity with which the attack was executed, that most be attributed their having an instant victory over the force of the most formidable positions that ever was occupied.

One hundred and six pieces of canon, two thousand prisoners (among them two general officers and fifty other officers), two hundred and sixteen wagons, were already brought to Mayence; while great quantities of arms, horses, and kinds, collected for the use of the people of the town, have likewise fallen into the hands of the Austrians.

The enemy's killed and wounded are supposed to amount to about three thousand.

The Austrians had on this occasion between 6,000 and 7,000 officers, and about 15,000 non-commissioned officers and privates killed and wounded; among the former were Lieutenant-general Schmettow and major-general Waldekenheim.

General Nauendorff crossed the Rhine in the afternoon, with part of his troops that had been stationed in the neighborhood of Gerst, and took possession of Oppenheim.

The Marquis is now encamped in front of Mayence, and his light troops are posted in all directions. I have the honor to be etc.

C. CRAUFURD.

From the Western Star.

To the COUNTRY LAWYER.

SIR,

I HAVE the honour to be one of the Clerks of a people of whom, in your dearth number, you expect the following concurring opinion: I wish, therefore, subjoin a single petit jury, in my Court of Common Pleas, Feb. 17, 1784, has been collected, to say three of whom are parties litigant, could have swelling to refer a case of five pounds value."

This you have declared to be your sentiment, in a sudden gulf of pallor, which is your usual justification; but is it a sufficient one, when you have deliberately published and prominently to the publick, that the Commonwealth is to be repudiated? If it fails you, as the writer, is so far from being a lawyer, that you are vain of the performance, and lose no opportunity of manning it, I have indeed heard it whispered, that you are, without knowing or suspecting it, a mere tool of certain other persons, who, to satisfy personal views, or because they "love to see such fun," play upon your vanity and tickle you up, with an expectation of becoming a great man, by attempting to kill slaves and overthrown mountains, that they push you forward, the fullness of hope, in your heart, that they themselves lie snug behind their entanglements, and will finally leave you to regret your temerity when it is too late, and to reproach them with failing of and deferring you in the hour of trial.

It behoves you, consider well this friendly hint, before you advance so far to retort. Yet whether prompted by others, or so impelled to the quiz enterprise, in either case, you stand responsible for the offensive affront. You have brought forward the charge, which is now before the public, and we, who feel ourselves slandered.

Linfolded by it, have a right to call you to the bar of the same impartial justice, to answer for the dangerous insult, and suffer the punishment of their just indignation, if found guilty.

You cannot believe that the Printers, who have published the accusation, will refuse a publication of the defense. Had they excluded the former, the latter would have been necessary. It is, however, my hope, that because you have hitherto been unnoticed, you will always escape and remain unnoticed, and be permitted to outrage the public and private character of men with impunity, as if you had a patent, for the exclusive right of abusing whom you please.

If the Judges of the Courts of Common Pleas, who have impudently called a pack of ignorant bladders, fit only to be displaced to make way for yourself and Co., though you have occasionally given them a sugar plum, to keep the poor things from crying and being too much grieved under your fatality, discipline; if they, I say, are pleased to pass over the abuse, as beneath their regard; it is an instance of their magnanimity; but it does not impose upon others a necessity of imitation. If Sheriff's overbear, what you do, they said against them, you may be assured, is in fact other testaments than either fear or respect.

Reinforced by it, have a right to call you to the bar of the same impartial justice, and the Government, whom, on all occasions, you exult for appropriating such a set of tools, as you do, and for daring to oppose your favorite measures, judge it will confess, your dignities of office to treat your adherents with stony contempt; even their example shall not screen you from justice. We, humble Juries, despicable as we are in your esteem, have, nevertheless, some of the feelings of men, and will not fail to set a mark upon you, and remember you as our avowed calumniator and enemy.

You are sensible, Sir, that the Settlement of the several Towns are required by law, once in three years, to make out a list of suitable persons for Juries, such as are constitutionally qualified to serve in the choice of Representatives, having good moral character, and sound knowledge in the interests of the State; and the Legislature, for the intereting benefit of determining questions of right and wrong, between man and man. None are to be included in the list, but such as are adjudged by the Selectmen to be well qualified to serve as Juries." And, if any one, who is thus approved, and appointed, shall afterwards be guilty of any scandalous immorality, his name is to be withdrawn out of the Box, as unworthy to be honorable a distinction. Out of the 1,000 names, to select one name for the Service, the towns are to elect one name for the State. The Committee, by these three qualities constitute a body of Juries for the Common Pleas. The trial for the higher Court, being determined by a major vote of all present; is not commonly formed with a very discriminating hand, the greater discrimination having been previously made by the Selectmen, at their leisure, between those who are, and those who are not, qualified for Juries.

I will not touch for the fidelity of Selectmen in the discharge of this trust. I know it is a matter of some delicacy, and instances have probably existed, where improper persons have been returned. But, in what safe hands can the authority of appointing Juries be lodged? Every Jurior is liable to abuse.

This necessarily results from the imperfections of human nature.

But then, therefore, lay aside all the infinite legal subtleties, and turn back to a state of savage society? One mode of collecting Juries has been the subject of many encomiums, and has been thought free from most of the objections, which have been complained of in the other States.

If there were but one Jury Box, there would be as many unqualified persons returned in the whole, for they would be precisely the same; but they might be more equally divided, between the Courts; and probably such would be the wish of the majority of the people of the town, like wise, fall into the hands of the Austrians.

The Country's killed and wounded are supposed to amount to about three thousand.

The Austrians had on this occasion between 6,000 and 7,000 officers, and about 15,000 non-commissioned officers and privates killed and wounded; among the former were Lieutenant-general Schmettow and major-general Waldekenheim.

General Nauendorff crossed the Rhine in the afternoon, with part of his troops that had been stationed in the neighborhood of Gerst, and took possession of Oppenheim.

The Marquis is now encamped in front of Mayence, and his light troops are posted in all directions. I have the honor to be etc.

C. CRAUFURD.

From the Western Star.

To the COUNTRY LAWYER.

SIR,

I HAVE the honour to be one of the Clerks of a people of whom, in your dearth number, you expect the following concurring opinion: I wish, therefore, subjoin a single petit jury, in my Court of Common Pleas, Feb. 17, 1784, has been collected, to say three of whom are parties litigant, could have swelling to refer a case of five pounds value."

This you have declared to be your sentiment, in a sudden gulf of pallor, which is your usual justification; but is it a sufficient one, when you have deliberately published and prominently to the publick, that the Commonwealth is to be repudiated? If it fails you, as the writer, is so far from being a lawyer, that you are vain of the performance, and lose no opportunity of manning it, I have indeed heard it whispered, that you are, without knowing or suspecting it, a mere tool of certain other persons, who, to satisfy personal views, or because they "love to see such fun," play upon your vanity and tickle you up, with an expectation of becoming a great man, by attempting to kill slaves and overthrown mountains, that they push you forward, the fullness of hope, in your heart, that they themselves lie snug behind their entanglements, and will finally leave you to regret your temerity when it is too late, and to reproach them with failing of and deferring you in the hour of trial.

It behoves you, consider well this friendly hint, before you advance so far to retort. Yet whether prompted by others, or so impelled to the quiz enterprise, in either case, you stand responsible for the offensive affront. You have brought forward the charge, which is now before the public, and we, who feel ourselves slandered.

Linfolded by it, have a right to call you to the bar of the same impartial justice, to answer for the dangerous insult, and suffer the punishment of their just indignation, if found guilty.

You cannot believe that the Printers, who have published the accusation, will refuse a publication of the defense. Had they excluded the former, the latter would have been necessary. It is, however, my hope, that because you have hitherto been unnoticed, you will always escape and remain unnoticed, and be permitted to outrage the public and private character of men with impunity, as if you had a patent, for the exclusive right of abusing whom you please.

If the Judges of the Courts of Common Pleas, who have impudently called a pack of ignorant bladders, fit only to be displaced to make way for yourself and Co., though you have occasionally given them a sugar plum, to keep the poor things from crying and being too much grieved under your fatality, discipline; if they, I say, are pleased to pass over the abuse, as beneath their regard; it is an instance of their magnanimity; but it does not impose upon others a necessity of imitation. If Sheriff's overbear, what you do, they said against them, you may be assured, is in fact other testaments than either fear or respect.

Reinforced by it, have a right to call you to the bar of the same impartial justice, and the Government, whom, on all occasions, you exult for appropriating such a set of tools, as you do, and for daring to oppose your favorite measures, judge it will confess, your dignities of office to treat your adherents with stony contempt; even their example shall not screen you from justice. We, humble Juries, despicable as we are in your esteem, have, nevertheless, some of the feelings of men, and will not fail to set a mark upon you, and remember you as our avowed calumniator and enemy.

You are sensible, Sir, that the Settlement of the several Towns are required by law, once in three years, to make out a list of suitable persons for Juries, such as are constitutionally qualified to serve in the choice of Representatives, having good moral character, and sound knowledge in the interests of the State; and the Legislature, for the intereting benefit of determining questions of right and wrong, between man and man. None are to be included in the list, but such as are adjudged by the Selectmen to be well qualified to serve as Juries." And, if any one, who is thus approved, and appointed, shall afterwards be guilty of any scandalous immorality, his name is to be withdrawn out of the Box, as unworthy to be honorable a distinction. Out of the 1,000 names, to select one name for the Service, the towns are to elect one name for the State. The Committee, by these three qualities constitute a body of Juries for the Common Pleas.

The trial for the higher Court, being determined by a major vote of all present; is not commonly formed with a very discriminating hand, the greater discrimination having been previously made by the Selectmen, at their leisure, between those who are, and those who are not, qualified for Juries.

The attack commenced in this order at half an hour past five in the morning. The disposition was executed with the utmost precision, in a very short time the battle was decided in favor of the Austrians, who displayed incomparable discipline and bravery. The general officers finding that they could not advance on horseback on account of the rapidity with which the troops retreated, were compelled to dismount and enter the encampments on foot, at the head of the troops. The enemy did not in the least expect to be attacked, and although they certainly had some time to prepare for their defense from the difficulties that the Austrian troops had to encounter in approaching the works, yet it is to the unexampled intrepidity with which the attack was executed, that most be attributed their having an instant victory over the force of the most formidable positions that ever was occupied.

One hundred and six pieces of canon, two thousand prisoners (among them two general officers and fifty other officers), two hundred and sixteen wagons, were already brought to Mayence; while great quantities of arms, horses, and kinds, collected for the use of the people of the town, have likewise fallen into the hands of the Austrians.

The enemy's killed and wounded are supposed to amount to about three thousand.

The Austrians had on this occasion between 6,000 and 7,000 officers, and about 15,000 non-commissioned officers and privates killed and wounded; among the former were Lieutenant-general Schmettow and major-general Waldekenheim.

General Nauendorff crossed the Rhine in the afternoon, with part of his troops that had been stationed in the neighborhood of Gerst, and took possession of Oppenheim.

The Marquis is now encamped in front of Mayence, and his light troops are posted in all directions. I have the honor to be etc.

C. CRAUFURD.

From the Western Star.

To the COUNTRY LAWYER.

SIR,

I HAVE the honour to be one of the Clerks of a people of whom, in your dearth number, you expect the following concurring opinion: I wish, therefore, subjoin a single petit jury, in my Court of Common Pleas, Feb. 17, 1784, has been collected, to say three of whom are parties litigant, could have swelling to refer a case of five pounds value?"

This you have declared to be your sentiment, in a sudden gulf of pallor, which is your usual justification; but is it a sufficient one, when you have deliberately published and prominently to the publick, that the Commonwealth is to be repudiated? If it fails you, as the writer, is so far from being a lawyer, that you are vain of the performance, and lose no opportunity of manning it, I have indeed heard it whispered, that you are, without knowing or suspecting it, a mere tool of certain other persons, who, to satisfy personal views, or because they "love to see such fun," play upon your vanity and tickle you up, with an expectation of becoming a great man, by attempting to kill slaves and overthrown mountains, that they push you forward, the fullness of hope, in your heart, that they themselves lie snug behind their entanglements, and will finally leave you to regret your temerity when it is too late, and to reproach them with failing of and deferring you in the hour of trial.

It behoves you, consider well this friendly hint, before you advance so far to retort. Yet whether prompted by others, or so impelled to the quiz enterprise, in either case, you stand responsible for the offensive affront. You have brought forward the charge, which is now before the public, and we, who feel ourselves slandered.

Linfolded by it, have a right to call you to the bar of the same impartial justice, to answer for the dangerous insult, and suffer the punishment of their just indignation, if found guilty.

You cannot believe that the Printers, who have published the accusation, will refuse a publication of the defense. Had they excluded the former, the latter would have been necessary. It is, however, my hope, that because you have hitherto been unnoticed, you will always escape and remain unnoticed, and be permitted to outrage the public and private character of men with impunity, as if you had a patent, for the exclusive right of abusing whom you please.

If the Judges of the Courts of Common Pleas, who have impudently called a pack of ignorant bladders, fit only to be displaced to make way for yourself and Co., though you have occasionally given them a sugar plum, to keep the poor things from crying and being too much grieved under your fatality, discipline; if they, I say, are pleased to pass over the abuse, as beneath their regard; it is an instance of their magnanimity; but it does not impose upon others a necessity of imitation. If Sheriff's overbear, what you do, they said against them, you may be assured, is in fact other testaments than either fear or respect.

Reinforced by it, have a right to call you to the bar of the same impartial justice, and the Government, whom, on all occasions, you exult for appropriating such a set of tools, as you do, and for daring to oppose your favorite measures, judge it will confess, your dignities of office to treat your adherents with stony contempt; even their example shall not screen you from justice. We, humble Juries, despicable as we are in your esteem, have, nevertheless, some of the feelings of men, and will not fail to set a mark upon you, and remember you as our avowed calumniator and enemy.

You are sensible, Sir, that the Settlement of the several Towns are required by law, once in three years, to make out a list of suitable persons for Juries, such as are constitutionally qualified to serve in the choice of Representatives, having good moral character, and sound knowledge in the interests of the State; and the Legislature, for the intereting benefit of determining questions of right and wrong, between man and man. None are to be included in the list, but such as are adjudged by the Selectmen to be well qualified to serve as Juries." And, if any one, who is thus approved, and appointed, shall afterwards be guilty of any scandalous immorality, his name is to be withdrawn out of the Box, as unworthy to be honorable a distinction. Out of the 1,000 names, to select one name for the Service, the towns are to elect one name for the State. The Committee, by these three qualities constitute a body of Juries for the Common Pleas.

The trial for the higher Court, being determined by a major vote of all present; is not commonly formed with a very discriminating hand, the greater discrimination having been previously made by the Selectmen, at their leisure, between those who are, and those who are not, qualified for Juries.

The attack commenced in this order at half an hour past five in the morning. The disposition was executed with the utmost precision, in a very short time the battle was decided in favor of the Austrians, who displayed incomparable discipline and bravery. The general officers finding that they could not advance on horseback on account of the rapidity with which the troops retreated, were compelled to dismount and enter the encampments on foot, at the head of the troops. The enemy did not in the least expect to be attacked, and although they certainly had some time to prepare for their defense from the difficulties that the Austrian troops had to encounter in approaching the works, yet it is to the unexampled intrepidity with which the attack was executed, that most be attributed their having an instant victory over the force of the most formidable positions that ever was occupied.

One hundred and six pieces of canon, two thousand prisoners (among them two general officers and fifty other officers), two hundred and sixteen wagons, were already brought to Mayence; while great quantities of arms, horses, and kinds, collected for the use of the people of the town, have likewise fallen into the hands of the Austrians.

The enemy's killed and wounded are supposed to amount to about three thousand.

The Austrians had on this occasion between 6,000 and 7,000 officers, and about 15,000 non-commissioned officers and privates killed and wounded; among the former were Lieutenant-general Schmettow and major-general Waldekenheim.

General Nauendorff crossed the Rhine in the afternoon, with part of his troops that had been stationed in the neighborhood of Gerst, and took possession of Oppenheim.

The Marquis is now encamped in front of Mayence, and his light troops are posted in all directions. I have the honor to be etc.

C. CRAUFURD.

From the Western Star.

To the COUNTRY LAWYER.

SIR,

I HAVE the honour to be one of the Clerks of a people of whom, in your dearth number, you expect the following concurring opinion: I wish, therefore, subjoin a single petit jury, in my Court of Common Pleas, Feb. 17, 1784, has been collected, to say three of whom are parties litigant, could have swelling to refer a case of five pounds value?"

This you have declared to be your sentiment, in a sudden gulf of pallor, which is your usual justification; but is it a sufficient one, when you have deliberately published and prominently to the publick, that the Commonwealth is to be repudiated? If it fails you, as the writer, is so far from being a lawyer, that you are vain of the performance, and lose no opportunity of manning it, I have indeed heard it whispered, that you are, without knowing or suspecting it, a mere tool of certain other persons, who, to satisfy personal views, or because they "love to see such fun," play upon your vanity and tickle you up, with an expectation of becoming a great man, by attempting to kill slaves and overthrown mountains, that they push you forward, the fullness of hope, in your heart, that they themselves lie snug behind their entanglements, and will finally leave you to regret your temerity when it is too late, and to reproach them with failing of and deferring you in the hour of trial.

It behoves you, consider well this friendly hint, before you advance so far to retort. Yet whether prompted by others, or so impelled to the quiz enterprise, in either case, you stand responsible for the offensive affront. You have brought forward the charge, which is now before the public, and we, who feel ourselves slandered.

Linfolded by it, have a right to call you to the bar of the same impartial justice, to answer for the dangerous insult, and suffer the punishment of their just indignation, if found guilty.

You cannot believe that the Printers, who have published the accusation, will refuse a publication of the defense. Had they excluded the former, the latter would have been necessary. It is, however, my hope, that because you have hitherto been unnoticed, you will always escape and remain unnoticed, and be permitted to outrage the public and private character of men with impunity, as if you had a patent, for the exclusive right of abusing whom you please.

If the Judges of the Courts of Common Pleas, who have impudently called a pack of ignorant bladders, fit only to be displaced to make way for yourself and Co., though you have occasionally given them a sugar plum, to keep the poor things from crying and being too much grieved under your fatality, discipline; if they, I say, are pleased to pass over the abuse, as beneath their regard; it is an instance of their magnanimity; but it does not impose upon others a necessity of imitation. If Sheriff's overbear, what you do, they said against them, you may be assured, is in fact other testaments than either fear or respect.

Reinforced by it, have a right to call you to the bar of the same impartial justice, and the Government, whom, on all occasions, you exult for appropriating such a set of tools, as you do, and for daring to oppose your favorite measures, judge it will confess, your dignities of office to treat your adherents with stony contempt; even their example shall not screen you from justice. We, humble Juries, despicable as we are in your esteem, have, nevertheless, some of the feelings of men, and will not fail to set a mark upon you, and remember you as our avowed calumniator and enemy.

You are sensible, Sir, that the Settlement of the several Towns are required by law, once in three years, to make out a list of suitable persons for Juries, such as are constitutionally qualified to serve in the choice of Representatives, having good moral character, and sound knowledge in the interests of the State; and the Legislature, for the intereting benefit of determining questions of right and wrong, between man and man. None are to be included in the list, but such as are adjudged by the Selectmen to be well qualified to serve as Juries." And, if any one, who is thus approved, and appointed, shall afterwards be guilty of any scandalous immorality, his name is to be withdrawn out of the Box, as unworthy to be honorable a distinction. Out of the 1,000 names, to select one name for the Service, the towns are to elect one name for the State. The Committee, by these three qualities constitute a body of Juries for the Common Pleas.

The trial for the higher Court, being determined by a major vote of all present; is not commonly formed with a very discriminating hand, the greater discrimination having been previously made by the Selectmen, at their leisure, between those who are, and those who are not, qualified for Juries.

The attack commenced in this order at half an hour past five in the morning. The disposition was executed with the utmost precision, in a very short time the battle was decided in favor of the Austrians, who displayed incomparable discipline and bravery. The general officers finding that they could not advance on horseback on account of the rapidity with which the troops retreated, were compelled to dismount and enter the encampments on foot, at the head of the troops. The enemy did not in the least expect to be attacked, and although they certainly had some time to prepare for their defense from the difficulties that the Austrian troops had to encounter in approaching the works, yet it is to the unexampled intrepidity with which the attack was executed, that most be attributed their having an instant victory over the force of the most formidable positions that ever was occupied.

One hundred and six pieces of canon, two thousand prisoners (among them two general officers and fifty other officers), two hundred and sixteen wagons, were already brought to Mayence; while great quantities of arms, horses, and kinds, collected for the use of the people of the town, have likewise fallen into the hands of the Austrians.

The enemy's killed and wounded are supposed to amount to about three thousand.

The Austrians had on this occasion between 6,000 and 7,000 officers, and about 15,000 non-commissioned officers and privates killed and wounded; among the former were Lieutenant-general Schmettow and major-general Waldekenheim.

General Nauendorff crossed the Rhine in the afternoon, with part of his troops that had been stationed in the neighborhood of Gerst, and took possession of Oppenheim.

The Marquis is now encamped in front of Mayence, and his light troops are posted in all directions. I have the honor to be etc.

C. CRAUFURD.

From the Western Star.

To the COUNTRY LAWYER.

SIR,

I HAVE the honour to be one of the Clerks of a people of whom, in your dearth number, you expect the following concurring opinion: I wish, therefore, subjoin a single petit jury, in my Court of Common Pleas, Feb. 17, 1784, has been collected, to say three of whom are parties litigant, could have swelling to refer a case of five pounds value?"

This you have declared to be your sentiment, in a sudden gulf of pallor, which is your usual justification; but is it a sufficient one, when you have deliberately published and prominently to the publick, that the Commonwealth is to be repudiated? If it fails you, as the writer, is so far from being a lawyer, that you are vain of the performance, and lose no opportunity of manning it, I have indeed heard it whispered, that you are, without knowing or suspecting it, a mere tool of certain other persons, who, to satisfy personal views, or because they "love to see such fun," play upon your vanity and tickle you up, with an expectation of becoming a great man, by attempting to kill slaves and overthrown mountains, that they push you forward, the fullness of hope, in your heart, that they themselves lie snug behind their entanglements, and will finally leave you to regret your temerity when it is too late, and to reproach them with failing of and deferring you in the hour of trial.

It behoves you, consider well this friendly hint, before you advance so far to retort. Yet whether prompted by others, or so impelled to the quiz enterprise, in either case, you stand responsible for the offensive affront. You have brought forward the charge, which is now before the public, and we, who feel ourselves slandered.

Linfolded by it, have a right to call you to the bar of the same impartial justice, to answer for the dangerous insult, and suffer the punishment of their just indignation, if found guilty.

You cannot believe that the Printers, who have published the accusation, will refuse a publication of the defense. Had they excluded the former, the latter would have been necessary. It is, however, my hope, that because you have hitherto been unnoticed, you will always escape and remain unnoticed, and be permitted to outrage the public and private character of men with impunity, as if you had a patent, for the exclusive right of abusing whom you please.

If the Judges of the Courts of Common Pleas, who have impudently called a pack of ignorant bladders, fit only to be displaced to make way for yourself and Co., though you have occasionally given them a sugar plum, to keep the poor things from crying and being too much grieved under your fatality, discipline; if they, I say, are pleased to pass over the abuse, as beneath their regard; it is an instance of their magnanimity; but it does not impose upon others a necessity of imitation. If Sheriff's overbear, what you do, they said against them, you may be assured, is in fact other testaments than either fear or respect.

Reinforced by it, have a right to call you to the bar of the same impartial justice, and the Government, whom, on all occasions, you exult for appropriating such a set of tools, as you do, and for daring to oppose your favorite measures, judge it will confess, your dignities of office to treat your adherents with stony contempt; even their example shall not screen you from justice. We, humble Juries, despicable as we are in your esteem, have, nevertheless, some of the feelings of men, and will not fail to set a mark upon you,