

TO THE AFFLUENT.

Written after the late violent snow storm... In the face of Winter's frown, Lashed by your sun's powerful beam;

On snow the wind is pelting rain... Drips through the flicker of a snow-cold; While the pale Moon's arena commends...

In vain they raise their piteous cry... And plead, in haughty Nature's call; 'Tis only food, a Mother's sigh...

Search'd in his miserable bed... The wretched Fisher fish in grief; Pale Sickness' rest upon his head...

The Parent's tender maternal eye... Mingle their fair and humid tears; Each woe from prostration flies...

O, woe! - the transports might be thine... To foath their fate's lot into peace! To bid the gloom of comfort shine!

Toe to the glow of Health's return... Re-ignite their faded cheer! Life's feeble spark, rekindled here...

O, Fisher's plight on I know... Forget awhile that quita my awe, And taste a fleeting sweet delight!

Forget the woe's poignant woe... That with this dropping form to earth; Where rifeless Sorrow hopes repose...
