

P O E T R Y.

TO MODESTY.

HAIT, modest, who will sit from
With blushing cheeks and downcast eyes,
Yet beauty charms thy hue.
That flowing crimson o'er the eyes,
Then fits its fervent varied dyes,
Alternately to view.

Sweet Maid, who in thyself retis'd,
Art fearful to be adm'd
And seek'd thy charms to hide;
For Modest by self control,
With way more powerful rules the soul,
That Reason's anxious pride.

Bold that yet trembling so,
While bold but half themselves disclose,
Yet fixed & firm perform;
Can the Devil to invite,
So charm the frost, to feel the fight,
In all thy gaudy bloom.

Without thee, ev'n the Moon's flame,
Which boasts a h'rn inspiring claim,
Were but a vulgar fire;

And Love left pining of the mind,
But that thy 's r'sl'd re'd,

Would link no low desire.

O bold thou tempt'd Sappho's lay,
And calm'd impudent Faustus's way,
She ne'er had sought the steep,
Nor from its height, by love shall'd,
Urg'd by disdain, to 'm'st fit'd,
Flung'd headlong in the deep.

Sir, could the Wave alone affage
Within her breast the glowing rage,

Then dread, re'g, her fate,
And hence those mod'led parts

Alone can charm a lover's heart,
Alone can fit thy braids?

THE POST.

"I will settle with you next week."

THE Post has dealings with almost every body, and, consequently,

knows the disposition, if not the circumstances of a great many people.

At the close of a quarter, the Post calls for pay.

About one fifth part, are ready to settle and begin a new—These people I notice have things in order, their work before them, and drive it, and are never troubled with the care of a promise to settle next week. But the remainder think next week will do.
