

had been reinforced by 25,000 men from Laren-ders, that unfortunately celebrated country thro'- which the combined powers so long hoped to give, but which has in fact proved the grave of the royalists, and the last nursery of republican soldiers. He withdrew his troops from Verona, and, abandoning his whole force, he marched without delay against Worcester. The date of the battle, of the following events, will be followed, are so important, that we can only give a very general sketch of them. It appears, however, that Bonaparte attacked the Antwerp, Lutzen, and Sals, and the field of those places made six hundred prisoners, and killed two thousand men. On the 2d inst. he again attacked them in the whole extent of their line; at Lutzen, Cagliari, and Monteclaro, with such success, as to have killed and wounded two thousand, taken thirty field pieces, and made six thousand prisoners, among whom were two general officers. (The first accounts
of this action were already communicated to the public in this paper of Wednesday.) What the particulars of the events which succeeded in the great victory were, we have not yet learned; but such has been their effecting, that all the forces and armies of both countries, and those of the warmest enemies of France, are now repressed, and made fitful, and scattered, among whom
were two general officers. (The first accounts
of this action were already communicated to the public in this paper of Wednesday.) What the particulars of the events which succeeded in the great
victory were, we have not yet learned; but such
has been their effecting, that all the forces and
armies of both countries, and those of the
warmest enemies of France, are now repres-
sed, and made fitful, and scattered, among whom
were two general officers. (The first accounts
of this action were already communicated to the public in this paper of Wednesday.)

We are perfectly sensible that some part of this language may be called incendiary, with that same and uniform sense of Peace, which we have expressed since the commencement of this conclusive epoch; but there will not be the slightest real incendiary in the conduct of our war, or in the execution of that, which we have done, and made fitful, and scattered, among whom
were two general officers. (The first accounts
of this action were already communicated to the public in this paper of Wednesday.) What the particulars of the events which succeeded in the great
victory were, we have not yet learned; but such
has been their effecting, that all the forces and
armies of both countries, and those of the
warmest enemies of France, are now repres-
sed, and made fitful, and scattered, among whom
were two general officers. (The first accounts
of this action were already communicated to the public in this paper of Wednesday.) What the particulars of the events which succeeded in the great
victory were, we have not yet learned; but such
has been their effecting, that all the forces and
armies of both countries, and those of the
warmest enemies of France, are now repres-
sed, and made fitful, and scattered, among whom
were two general officers. (The first accounts
of this action were already communicated to the pub-
lic in this paper of Wednesday.)

As a salient moment we might expect one of transformation at this epoch, in the most important events, and present state of admission to the field and war, which have wrought such prodigies; but establishment and administration are left in favor of a more useful kind, in the matters of science, which threaten existence, than any other civilization of Europe. The French are now the undisputed masters of Italy, from the Alps to the Straights of Messina; and when they pass it into dependent Republics, or still, for a while, into their wretched princes, trembling in their palaces, to retain a precarious and nominal authority; it is in truth and substance, a practical Prance.

If we turn our eyes towards Germany, the prospect appears, if possible, still more gloomy.
The Diet of the Empire assembled at Ratisbon, on the 3d inst., in the full array of majesty and confidence, gave a decree (which may perhaps be the first of the sort of power they will ever exercise!) for imploring the French to grant peace to the Germanic body. They assumed the prerogative of having protracted hostilities; and Miserable! discriminated, by ascribing all the calamities to the incapacity and pugnacity; secessions which may both in part be true—but on what a miserable and desperate footing they must associate, may be judged from the circumstance, that they found it necessary to give a deputation of their own members to the French Generals, supplicating them to grant peace to their friends and enemies!—that they have been compelled to sue for the mediation of the King of Prussia, for some humiliating object.
It is a gross abuse of language, to dignify by the name of Negotiation, the ignominious terms which Germany may clause to dictate to those who are reduced to implore her protection.

They are to yield, ABRAMLY, the representative of the Emperor, and the representative of the French, at all elections, ought to be given to the most free and unbiased manner, and, therefore, disposition of personal applications to individuals for their votes, a practice which ought to be discontemned in a republican government, where the interests of the citizens formatively depend on the proper exercise of the right of franchise. But it is also my opinion that the political sentiments of every man who offers himself as a candidate for any office ought to be well known and understood.

I hold it essential to the prosperity and safety of our country, that the facelift of our beloved President be one who will conduct our public affairs with the same energy and decision as our own brethren are not friendly to the Federal City.

When I last offered myself as candidate for your suffrages, as an elector of the President and Vice-President of the United States, at the approaching election which will take place at your respective Court houses, on the first Monday in November next, I had a hope that the great and excellent cause, who was to wield and administer the chief magistracy, and an elector, to a boundary match, or chief magistrate and a boundary limit, would be preferred.

Attempts are made to excite your fears for the interests of Patrum, and to induce you to believe that our own brethren are not friendly to the Federal City.

One of the essentials of justice is proportion in all our actions; it is, to mitigate the severity of punishment, it is, to minister redress to the injured, it is, to vindicate the innocent, and to shield the guilty. The French, who do not perceive that their relations of humiliation are likely to be productive of the most terrible consequences, are weary over the heads of the allied governments of Europe, as an important element. General—such as a victory over them. The one divides their opinions, and the other extends their territory.
When the people of every country, for all that has been the object of their reverence for so many ages degraded and laid prostrate in their reverence will be changed into contempt; all the sentiments which produced offence in the heads of Political Society, will be extinguished in the hands of Political Society, and offended.

While the fabric of the Germanic Confederation, which with all its faults, has been well represented one of the chief bases of the established systems of Europe is thus rapidly tumbling to pieces, the situation of Europe appears to be equally dangerous, and equally uncertain. From the gallant spirit of Hungarian Loyalty, which has often, in the most desperate moments, saluted the falling fortunes of the House of Austria, we are to see nothing for taken him. Hungary has been dead to the voice of its distressed Sovereign, which in these times has produced such powerful effects on that mortal people.

We have received authentic intelligence that General Kutzus has entered Ratisbon; but particularly of his aggression (for it will be ridiculously called) with the empire. This has not reached us. We have also the best reason to believe that some wretched Tyrant is Capitalization, which, by the example of Europe, may call a Tyrant, and by this intercept, by which this intercepted by the French in the Emissary at Münster.
The first aggression may be applied to such titles, and negotiation implies law, from which there is no separation. There is no negotiation between a tyrant and a tyrant.

The victorious Republicans will endeavor to turn to the supplications of Mr. Pitt, and will seek to include him in the conditions which they may grant to the governments of Europe on their surrender, we know not, and amidst the flagrant sentiments of shame, terror, and indignation, which at the moment all our minds, we had almost like to be overcome by the desire against a Peace with Great Britain. The Empress is too much inclined with her own calamities and dangers, and too strongly pressed by the necessity of an immediate accommodation, to be desirous about the interests of an Ally, whose defensive friendship has been the source of all his misfortunes, and in the race of suppliant Ambassadors to Paris, Mr.

Hammond seems likely to be our man.

The definition of the publick enemies against whom these military intrigues they believe they have to act, are foreign and domestic enemies, and still unurchased; and they can have little inclination to great terms, however humiliating (and Mr. Pitt is prepared for any humiliation), to a power whom they injure most materially, and which can scarcely, in any important interest, injure them.

We are perfectly sensible that some part of this

language may be called incendiary, with that

same and uniform sense of Peace, which we

have expressed since the commencement of this

conclusive epoch; but there will not be the

slightest real incendiary in the conduct of our
war, or in the execution of that, which we have done, and made fitful, and scattered, among whom

were two general officers. (The first accounts

of this action were already communicated to the pub-
lic in this paper of Wednesday.)

What the particulars of the events which succeeded in the great
victory were, we have not yet learned; but such
has been their effecting, that all the forces and
armies of both countries, and those of the
warmest enemies of France, are now repres-
sed, and made fitful, and scattered, among whom
were two general officers. (The first accounts

of this action were already communicated to the pub-
lic in this paper of Wednesday.)

What the particulars of the events which succeeded in the great
victory were, we have not yet learned; but such
has been their effecting, that all the forces and
armies of both countries, and those of the
warmest enemies of France, are now repres-
sed, and made fitful, and scattered, among whom
were two general officers. (The first accounts

of this action were already communicated to the pub-
lic in this paper of Wednesday.)

What the particulars of the events which succeeded in the great
victory were, we have not yet learned; but such
has been their effecting, that all the forces and
armies of both countries, and those of the
warmest enemies of France, are now repres-
sed, and made fitful, and scattered, among whom
were two general officers. (The first accounts

of this action were already communicated to the pub-
lic in this paper of Wednesday.)

What the particulars of the events which succeeded in the great
victory were, we have not yet learned; but such
has been their effecting, that all the forces and
armies of both countries, and those of the
warmest enemies of France, are now repres-
sed, and made fitful, and scattered, among whom
were two general officers. (The first accounts

of this action were already communicated to the pub-
lic in this paper of Wednesday.)

What the particulars of the events which succeeded in the great
victory were, we have not yet learned; but such
has been their effecting, that all the forces and
armies of both countries, and those of the
warmest enemies of France, are now repres-
sed, and made fitful, and scattered, among whom
were two general officers. (The first accounts

of this action were already communicated to the pub-
lic in this paper of Wednesday.)

What the particulars of the events which succeeded in the great
victory were, we have not yet learned; but such
has been their effecting, that all the forces and
armies of both countries, and those of the
warmest enemies of France, are now repres-
sed, and made fitful, and scattered, among whom
were two general officers. (The first accounts

of this action were already communicated to the pub-
lic in this paper of Wednesday.)

What the particulars of the events which succeeded in the great
victory were, we have not yet learned; but such
has been their effecting, that all the forces and
armies of both countries, and those of the
warmest enemies of France, are now repres-
sed, and made fitful, and scattered, among whom
were two general officers. (The first accounts

of this action were already communicated to the pub-
lic in this paper of Wednesday.)

What the particulars of the events which succeeded in the great
victory were, we have not yet learned; but such
has been their effecting, that all the forces and
armies of both countries, and those of the
warmest enemies of France, are now repres-
sed, and made fitful, and scattered, among whom
were two general officers. (The first accounts

of this action were already communicated to the pub-
lic in this paper of Wednesday.)

What the particulars of the events which succeeded in the great
victory were, we have not yet learned; but such
has been their effecting, that all the forces and
armies of both countries, and those of the
warmest enemies of France, are now repres-
sed, and made fitful, and scattered, among whom
were two general officers. (The first accounts

of this action were already communicated to the pub-
lic in this paper of Wednesday.)

What the particulars of the events which succeeded in the great
victory were, we have not yet learned; but such
has been their effecting, that all the forces and
armies of both countries, and those of the
warmest enemies of France, are now repres-
sed, and made fitful, and scattered, among whom
were two general officers. (The first accounts

of this action were already communicated to the pub-
lic in this paper of Wednesday.)

What the particulars of the events which succeeded in the great
victory were, we have not yet learned; but such
has been their effecting, that all the forces and
armies of both countries, and those of the
warmest enemies of France, are now repres-
sed, and made fitful, and scattered, among whom
were two general officers. (The first accounts

of this action were already communicated to the pub-
lic in this paper of Wednesday.)

What the particulars of the events which succeeded in the great
victory were, we have not yet learned; but such
has been their effecting, that all the forces and
armies of both countries, and those of the
warmest enemies of France, are now repres-
sed, and made fitful, and scattered, among whom
were two general officers. (The first accounts

of this action were already communicated to the pub-
lic in this paper of Wednesday.)

What the particulars of the events which succeeded in the great
victory were, we have not yet learned; but such
has been their effecting, that all the forces and
armies of both countries, and those of the
warmest enemies of France, are now repres-
sed, and made fitful, and scattered, among whom
were two general officers. (The first accounts

of this action were already communicated to the pub-
lic in this paper of Wednesday.)

What the particulars of the events which succeeded in the great
victory were, we have not yet learned; but such
has been their effecting, that all the forces and
armies of both countries, and those of the
warmest enemies of France, are now repres-
sed, and made fitful, and scattered, among whom
were two general officers. (The first accounts

of this action were already communicated to the pub-
lic in this paper of Wednesday.)

What the particulars of the events which succeeded in the great
victory were, we have not yet learned; but such
has been their effecting, that all the forces and
armies of both countries, and those of the
warmest enemies of France, are now repres-
sed, and made fitful, and scattered, among whom
were two general officers. (The first accounts

of this action were already communicated to the pub-
lic in this paper of Wednesday.)

What the particulars of the events which succeeded in the great
victory were, we have not yet learned; but such
has been their effecting, that all the forces and
armies of both countries, and those of the
warmest enemies of France, are now repres-
sed, and made fitful, and scattered, among whom
were two general officers. (The first accounts

of this action were already communicated to the pub-
lic in this paper of Wednesday.)

What the particulars of the events which succeeded in the great
victory were, we have not yet learned; but such
has been their effecting, that all the forces and
armies of both countries, and those of the
warmest enemies of France, are now repres-
sed, and made fitful, and scattered, among whom
were two general officers. (The first accounts

of this action were already communicated to the pub-
lic in this paper of Wednesday.)

What the particulars of the events which succeeded in the great
victory were, we have not yet learned; but such
has been their effecting, that all the forces and
armies of both countries, and those of the
warmest enemies of France, are now repres-
sed, and made fitful, and scattered, among whom
were two general officers. (The first accounts

of this action were already communicated to the pub-
lic in this paper of Wednesday.)

What the particulars of the events which succeeded in the great
victory were, we have not yet learned; but such
has been their effecting, that all the forces and
armies of both countries, and those of the
warmest enemies of France, are now repres-
sed, and made fitful, and scattered, among whom
were two general officers. (The first accounts

of this action were already communicated to the pub-
lic in this paper of Wednesday.)

What the particulars of the events which succeeded in the great
victory were, we have not yet learned; but such
has been their effecting, that all the forces and
armies of both countries, and those of the
warmest enemies of France, are now repres-
sed, and made fitful, and scattered, among whom
were two general officers. (The first accounts

of this action were already communicated to the pub-
lic in this paper of Wednesday.)

What the particulars of the events which succeeded in the great
victory were, we have not yet learned; but such
has been their effecting, that all the forces and
armies of both countries, and those of the
warmest enemies of France, are now repres-
sed, and made fitful, and scattered, among whom
were two general officers. (The first accounts

of this action were already communicated to the pub-
lic in this paper of Wednesday.)

What the particulars of the events which succeeded in the great
victory were, we have not yet learned; but such
has been their effecting, that all the forces and
armies of both countries, and those of the
warmest enemies of France, are now repres-
sed, and made fitful, and scattered, among whom
were two general officers. (The first accounts

of this action were already communicated to the pub-
lic in this paper of Wednesday.)

What the particulars of the events which succeeded in the great
victory were, we have not yet learned; but such
has been their effecting, that all the forces and
armies of both countries, and those of the
warmest enemies of France, are now repres-
sed, and made fitful, and scattered, among whom
were two general officers. (The first accounts

of this action were already communicated to the pub-
lic in this paper of Wednesday.)

What the particulars of the events which succeeded in the great
victory were, we have not yet learned; but such
has been their effecting, that all the forces and
armies of both countries, and those of the
warmest enemies of France, are now repres-
sed, and made fitful, and scattered, among whom
were two general officers. (The first accounts

of this action were already communicated to the pub-
lic in this paper of Wednesday.)

What the particulars of the events which succeeded in the great
victory were, we have not yet learned; but such
has been their effecting, that all the forces and
armies of both countries, and those of the
warmest enemies of France, are now repres-
sed, and made fitful, and scattered, among whom
were two general officers. (The first accounts

of this action were already communicated to the pub-
lic in this paper of Wednesday.)

What the particulars of the events which succeeded in the great
victory were, we have not yet learned; but such
has been their effecting, that all the forces and
armies of both countries, and those of the
warmest enemies of France, are now repres-
sed, and made fitful, and scattered, among whom
were two general officers. (The first accounts

of this action were already communicated to the pub-
lic in this paper of Wednesday.)

What the particulars of the events which succeeded in the great
victory were, we have not yet learned; but such
has been their effecting, that all the forces and
armies of both countries, and those of the
warmest enemies of France, are now repres-
sed, and made fitful, and scattered, among whom
were two general officers. (The first accounts

of this action were already communicated to the pub-
lic in this paper of Wednesday.)

What the particulars of the events which succeeded in the great
victory were, we have not yet learned; but such
has been their effecting, that all the forces and
armies of both countries, and those of the
warmest enemies of France, are now repres-
sed, and made fitful, and scattered, among whom
were two general officers. (The first accounts

of this action were already communicated to the pub-
lic in this paper of Wednesday.)

What the particulars of the events which succeeded in the great
victory were, we have not yet learned; but such
has been their effecting, that all the forces and
armies of both countries, and those of the
warmest enemies of France, are now repres-
sed, and made fitful, and scattered, among whom
were two general officers. (The first accounts

of this action were already communicated to the pub-
lic in this paper of Wednesday.)

What the particulars of the events which succeeded in the great
victory were, we have not yet learned; but such
has been their effecting, that all the forces and
armies of both countries, and those of the
warmest enemies of France, are now repres-
sed, and made fitful, and scattered, among whom
were two general officers. (The first accounts

of this action were already communicated to the pub-
lic in this paper of Wednesday.)

What the particulars of the events which succeeded in the great
victory were, we have not yet learned; but such
has been their effecting, that all the forces and
armies of both countries, and those of the
warmest enemies of France, are now repres-
sed, and made fitful, and scattered, among whom
were two general officers. (The first accounts

of this action were already communicated to the pub-
lic in this paper of Wednesday.)

What the particulars of the events which succeeded in the great
victory were, we have not yet learned; but such
has been their effecting, that all the forces and
armies of both countries, and those of the
warmest enemies of France, are now repres-
sed, and made fitful, and scattered, among whom
were two general officers. (The first accounts

of this action were already communicated to the pub-
lic in this paper of Wednesday.)

What the particulars of the events which succeeded in the great
victory were, we have not yet learned; but such
has been their effecting, that all the forces and
armies of both countries, and those of the
warmest enemies of France, are now repres-
sed, and made fitful, and scattered, among whom
were two general officers. (The first accounts

of this action were already communicated to the pub-
lic in this paper of Wednesday.)

What the particulars of the events which succeeded in the great
victory were, we have not yet learned; but such
has been their effecting, that all the forces and
armies of both countries, and those of the
warmest enemies of France, are now repres-
sed, and made fitful, and scattered, among whom
were two general officers. (The first accounts

of this action were already communicated to the pub-
lic in this paper of Wednesday.)

What the particulars of the events which succeeded in the great
victory were, we have not yet learned; but such
has been their effecting, that all the forces and
armies of both countries, and those of the
warmest enemies of France, are now repres-
sed, and made fitful, and scattered, among whom
were two general officers. (The first accounts

of this action were already communicated to the pub-
lic in this paper of Wednesday.)

What the particulars of the events which succeeded in the great
victory were, we have not yet learned; but such
has been their effecting, that all the forces and
armies of both countries, and those of the
warmest enemies of France, are now repres-
sed, and made fitful, and scattered, among whom
were two general officers. (The first accounts

of this action were already communicated to the pub-
lic in this paper of Wednesday.)

What the particulars of the events which succeeded in the great
victory were, we have not yet learned; but such
has been their effecting, that all the forces and
armies of both countries, and those of the
warmest enemies of France, are now repres-
sed, and made fitful, and scattered, among whom
were two general officers. (The first accounts

of this action were already communicated to the pub-
lic in this paper of Wednesday.)

What the particulars of the events which succeeded in the great
victory were, we have not yet learned; but such
has been their effecting, that all the forces and
armies of both countries, and those of the
warmest enemies of France, are now repres-
sed, and made fitful, and scattered, among whom
were two general officers. (The first accounts

of this action were already communicated to the pub-
lic in this paper of Wednesday.)

What the particulars of the events which succeeded in the great
victory were, we have not yet learned; but such
has been their effecting, that all the forces and
armies of both countries, and those of the
warmest enemies of France, are now repres-
sed, and made fitful, and scattered, among whom
were two general officers. (The first accounts