ARCHITECTURAL SIGNIFICANCE (describe important architectural features and evaluate in terms of other buildings within community)

The house is two-and-a-half stories high with slate, ridge roof, projecting side gables, and a two-and-a-half story hipped central pavillion. The pavillion has a "Palladain" window on the second floor and the main entrance with leaded glass sidelights on the second floor. A one-story porch with flat roof, projecting cornice with dentil frieze, Tuscan columns and blaustrade extend across the three-bay facade, and a triple window with ornately leaded transom flanks the entrance on the first floor.

HISTORICAL SIGNIFICANCE (explain the role owners played in local or state history and how the building relates to the development of the community)

This house was built during 1904 for Frank L. Clapp at a cost of $4500. Mr. Clapp was co-owner of a Main St. meat market. The house is possibly designed by Roswell Putnam, a well-known local architect of the turn-of-the-century who specializes in Colonial Revieal design.
