ARCHITECTURAL SIGNIFICANCE (describe important architectural features and evaluate in terms of other buildings within community)

The house is 2½ stories in height with pedimented end to the street and a 2½ story pedimented projection on the eastern end of the facade and a similar projection, but with angled first story to create a bay window, on the eastern side. Fish-scale shingles cover the tympanums of the gables and there is a one-story porch on the western half of the facade. This has hippedroof, turned posts with fancy brackets and a balu - strade.

HISTORICAL SIGNIFICANCE (explain the role owners played in local or state history and how the building relates to the development of the community)

"Prospect Heights" an area along Prospect St. between Hinckley (now known as Jackson) and North Elm Sts., was opened in the late 1890's for residential development. This development was spurred by the opening of an electric railway line connecting this area to the center of town and Florence.

This house was built by 1900 as Mrs. Daniel Whalen is listed at this address in the directory of that year. During the early 20th century about 15 houses were built on "Prospect Heights" all on the north side of the Street. Across the street was the Watson estate, later to become Childs Bark.
